We move so many pianos we could give lessons.

In fact we do. The professionals from Despatch Moving and Storage that pad, pack, load, drive, and unload your possessions have received hours and hours of training long before we let them touch any of your belongings, let alone your Baby.

Despatch began moving people in 1910. Even then they realized the key to successful moves wasn't just strong backs and powerful trucks. It was heart. Caring about the people they were moving and the things that made their house a home were more important. Today, the thank you letters we receive from our clients are music to our ears. Many of the words used strike a familiar chord – careful, friendly, understanding, professional, courteous, and efficient. We're not surprised. Moving pianos is not our only forte. Our staff knows how to baby your antiques, collectibles, fine art, furniture, as well as your floors and walls. In short, if you're planning a move call us — but only if you want to be babied in grand style.

Hampton TurnKey

One Price Does it All – Beachfront Mansion, Benz, Trophy Wife & More

By Dan Rattiner

Have you heard about Hampton TurnKey? It's a new company that is coming to the Hamptons to serve the needs of those who have never been here before but want to spend a month here and just "fit in" without having to do any of the work.

"TurnKey does all the work," said Bill Martin, who is founding the service. "All you have to do is get in your three year old Mercedes-Benz R350 and drive out. Just turn the key."

"What if you don't have a Mercedes-Benz R350?" we asked.

"That's the first thing we provide you with. And that's the whole point. There are many cars to consider for use in the Hamptons. We have decided it for you. The car that says 'Hamptons' is the Mercedes-Benz R350."

"Tell us about the service."

"We don't care who you are. You could be some poor slob from Tom's River, New Jersey, whose idea of good music is The Boss."

"The Boss?"

"Exactly. And that's what I'm talking about. Hamptonites, such as you, don't know about the Boss. You know about……"

"Billy Joel?"

"Right. So after you've spent this huge sum of money with us, the last thing you do, before you start coming out here for your month, is accept, with our compliments, a Billy Joel album."

"So, what is this huge sum of money?"

"It's $800,000. And for that you get, for the month, a fully furnished house in either the Estate Section of Southampton or in Georgica in East Hampton, a Benz, a boat, a staff, a wardrobe of clothes, a trophy wife and three kids, a membership in one of the exclusive clubs in the community, two friends who are your 'houseguests' for the month, a tennis pro, two big catered parties during your month for 300 people and a business that does more than one billion dollars a year."

> During the month you are in the Hamptons, you want to be seen with two friends who are very witty and well educated.

"I'm full of questions."

"Go ahead."

"Well, the business."

"The business is named after some geological outcropping. Matterhorn. Everest. Vesuvius. McKinley. Pike's. We put three of them together. So it could be Matterhorn, Everest, McKinley Associates."

"And this person is an Associate?"

"The CEO. We provide business cards, a headquarters address, a website, a statement of purpose."

"And if people call the number?"

"We have a staff set up to answer the phone. When the call comes in, we transfer the call to your private secretary, who we also employ and who will say that you are not in and she will take a message."

"Won't people know this is a fake business?"

"No. If they look, they'll find it exists. After that, who cares? I mean you're out there on the first of the month, and then thirty days later, you're gone. Perhaps to Palm Beach. We are setting up our service there, too."

"What about the boat?"

"It's a sport-fishing yacht, a Viking. The latest rage. 82 feet. Brand new. Comes with a captain, crew and chef. We actually have it out there, staffed and ready to go if you want to go for a ride."

"Friends?"

"We can staff it with friends. Capacity is 20 people."

CORRECTION

In an article about the closing of the Ferregut Art Gallery in last week's paper, a sentence should have said it was Mrs. Merchant's opinion that the owner of the Tower had misrepresented to her what could be done in the space by allowing someone to sign a lease and operate a business when the COO (Certificate of Occupancy) clearly states otherwise. As printed, it left the impression that this misrepresentation by the unnamed landlord was an actual fact when there was no proof offered that was the case. We regret the error.

Key

"Can you have some of your own friends on the boat?"

"No. You have to have certain particular friends and we know who they are. Also, your friends might get drunk and break something."

"Can someone paying this $800,000 decide which house they want for the summer?"

"Again, no. We do that for you, too. It takes all the guesswork out, so you can just enjoy the month. You know, it's so easy to make a mistake with a house. Fifties Modern is out. There are split levels, colonials, Spanish stucco, Hawaiian, Dutch, Tyrolean houses, all built here in the Hamptons, by people with totally misguided design concepts. We know what you want."

"What?"

"Twelve bedrooms, fifteen bathrooms, a tennis court and a pool, less than five years old and a perfect reproduction of early twentieth century 'cottage' style architecture. A long gravel driveway, a border of hedgerows and a gate with a security code, plus a two-way phone system."

"Doesn't that cut down on the choices?"

"More than half the homes in the Hamptons fit this description. All the others are mistakes. Just leave everything to us."

"Trophy wife. Three kids."

"She's beautiful and will accompany you everywhere. But we are not an X-rated organization. She gets her own bedroom. Her own bathroom and her own closet. Other than that, you are on your own as far as that goes. But she will have meals with you, make pleasant talk, and tell you how wonderful you are. As for the kids, it's all taken care of. They come with nannies, baby sitters, au pairs, private tutors, tennis instructors, and a month at one of the camps in the area, all paid for."

"The friends?"

"During the month you are in the Hamptons, you want to be seen with two friends who are very witty and well educated. They will be staying with you, sitting around the pool, having dinner with you and the wife and kids, going to the beach, talking about this and that. And this is one of these areas where you actually get a choice. We're talking a choice of category. You can choose two friends, same sex as you, from a list of categories. The categories are: legal, you get a judge; entertainment, you get a movie producer; royalty, you get a mid-level royal from Europe; sports, a first class Argentinean polo player; writing, you get a Pulitzer Prize winning novelist; the arts, you get a celebrated painter. I think that's it. Oh, academia, you get a professor of philosophy."

"These are real people?"

"Some of them. The other ones are so good at impersonating who they should be that you will never know the difference. But as I said, you get to choose the category. But only among these choices. You cannot get somebody from another category. You cannot get a bowling alley owner, you cannot get a member of the mob, you cannot get a pool shark, you cannot get a stockbroker. These people are perfectly nice, but not suitable as friends for the likes of you."

"I get it. You mentioned private clubs."

"We are currently in contact with all the private clubs in the Hamptons — the Meadow Club, Maidstone, Devon, the National, Shinnecock, and so forth. We are in the middle of working things out."

"But you can't say which one it is yet."

"No, and even if I could I wouldn't. It's a rule of all clubs that nobody is allowed to talk about the club to anybody outside the club. You can get thrown out of the club for that. But I can assure you that when the time comes, and the $800,000 smackers are paid, we will whisper in your ear the name of a famous club."

"You didn't mention a driver."

"Oh, yes, of course. You get a driver. In fact, two drivers. One for your trophy wife and the kids, who, by the way, get a Range Rover. I forgot all about that."

"Anything else?"

"Yes. When you first come on board, which we require to be two months in advance, we meet you, and in one visit learn about your politics, your opinions, your manners and your speech patterns. We will provide six weeks of personal training to make you acceptable to anybody in the Hamptons you might meet. We also take your measurements to provide you with your wardrobe — top of the line, of course. And we find out your favorite cuisine."

"Why?"

"You'll have a cook. Gourmet, of course. But what? Fusion? Italian? Japanese? Vegetarian?"

"I get it. What is your personal background, if I might ask?"

"Does it matter?" •

Improve your life with Dental Implants

By Dr. HOWARD POPPER

Chances are, whether you have lost one tooth or several, whether it is a new situation or something you have lived with for years, you have never become fully accustomed to losing such a vital part of yourself.

Now you can have replacement teeth that look, feel and function like natural teeth. Advances in dental science allow your dentist to offer artificial tooth roots which fuse with the jawbone to form a secure foundation for tooth replacement.

This concept for oral rehabilitation was developed by noted Swedish scientist and orthopedic surgeon Dr. Per Ingvar Branemark over forty years ago. This research opened the door to a lifetime of renewed comfort and self-confidence for hundreds of thousands of people facing tooth loss.

What happens when you lose a tooth?

If you are missing one tooth or more, you may find there are other things you miss. You may miss your natural smile. And when was the last time you crunched into an apple or sank your teeth into a mouth-watering steak? Maybe you feel self-conscious about eating or speaking in public. Perhaps your remaining teeth are shifting, or you suffer from muscle strain or headaches. Do you miss the comfort you once experienced in familiar situations at work, home, or with friends?

Naturally, the effects of tooth loss vary from person to person and depend on what has been lost. If you have lost a crown, you have lost the visible part of your tooth. If you have lost the root as well, you have lost the unseen part of your tooth and indeed the most important part. The root anchors the tooth to your jawbone providing support for the crown. Without the root, the bone around the missing tooth will gradually recede, remaining teeth will shift, and chewing will become more difficult with time.

For those who have lost all of their teeth in an upper or lower jaw, the long term problems are even greater. Because bone shrinks after tooth loss, nerves become exposed and dentures lack support. Loose fitting dentures compound problems and lead to sore gum tissue and additional pain.

Clean Mouth Better Health - The Perils of Periodontal Disease

- Periodontal disease attacks the gums and the bone supporting the teeth in the jawbones, thereby leading to loss of teeth. To eliminate gum inflammation, treatment consisting of scaling, root planing and curettage - which is essentially cleaning the teeth well - is required.
- If periodontal pockets persist, periodontal surgery may be indicated. Receding gums are another frequently overlooked problem that requires treatment; periodontal surgery can be performed to improve appearance when there is an abundance of gum tissue.
- Numerous studies have linked periodontal disease with heart disease, diabetes, low birth weight babies, pancreatic cancer, obesity and osteoporosis. Periodontal disease can be a chronic condition which requires ongoing care. Professional periodontal treatment is an investment in the health of your mouth and your overall well-being.

Southampton Village Lacks Certain Ethics in their New Ethics Code

By Dan Rattiner

The Village of Southampton is a small patch of land within the more than four hundred square miles covered by the larger entity of Southampton Town. Where in the Town, there are about 500 people employed full-time, in the Village there are just 100. The others who work in the Village — and about 20 people do so, on any given day — are there either as volunteers or just as part time employees. For example, Mayor Mark Epley is expected to show up for a bit every day at Village Hall on Main Street and on some days all day, but is paid just $14,400 a year for his services. His "real" job is as full-time Director of the Seafield Rehab Center in Westhampton Beach.

Sometimes it's tough to find people who want to fill these part time posts. But my hat is off to those who do, because working for so little pay is an honorable way to give back to the community in which you live.

> "I think, if we can't put anything in the ethics code about this, we should enforce the ordinance we have."

In case you think that Southampton Village is some kind of special case in this regard, I can assure you it is not. The same holds true in all the incorporated Villages in our community, from Sagaponack and East Hampton Village, to Quogue and the Village of Westhampton Beach as well as numerous others. These are small villages with small budgets and part time people, for the most part.

Also in many Villages, and Southampton is one of them, there are ordinances on the books, put there thirty or forty years ago, to keep people who have businesses that can directly benefit from financial contracts made with the Village, from serving on any of the Village Boards — not on the Planning Board, Zoning Board, Village Board or, in the villages where they have them — Architectural Review Boards. Obviously, people making decisions about something should be at arms length from the beneficiaries of those decisions. For example, Mayor Epley would almost never have direct contact with any funding from Southampton Village. The Seafield Rehab Center is in Westhampton Beach. Others who serve on boards are Doctors, Dentists, Merchants, Lawyers, Landscapers, Environmentalists, Teachers and Professors. The Mayor before Mark Epley, was a math teacher at Southampton High School.

The next thing I'm going to say is going to surprise you. This was all before the rise of the real estate business.

Now there are Very Big Bucks on the table. And some of the most able people in town are in that business, as surveyors, real estate agents, real estate developers, contractors and architects. And apparently, the Village of Southampton, maybe ten years ago, began to ignore this very silly little ordinance.

For example, just two years ago, I had occasion to write about a controversial real estate development in that village and in the course of things I dealt with some decisions made that year by the Southampton Village Architectural Review Board. Who was on it? Four people. A builder, a real estate agent, a developer and a man in the landscaping business.

Where is the enforcement of this village ordinance? It is nowhere. Last week, Mayor Epley engaged in a conversation at the Village Board meeting with Trustee William Bates, who has been trying to require that the Village enforce this ordinance. This conversation took place during a debate just before the voting of a new "ethics code" for the Village. There was no mention or reference to the conflict of interest ordinance in the Village.

"We should be trying to clarify who should be allowed to sit on these boards," Mr. Bates said. "I think, if we can't put anything in the ethics code about this," (his proposal to do so was rejected), then we should enforce the ordinance we have."

Mr. Epley, after agreeing that the ordinance was not being enforced, said that it was self evident that people on boards shouldn't use them to advance their personal interests, and those that do should be prosecuted. He also said that the 1970s definition of who should not be allowed on the board, those "in the business of developing land," is too vague and ambiguous.

It sure doesn't sound vague and ambiguous to me.

Trustee Nancy McGann said that Mr. Bates' persistence in trying to get the ordinance enforced or mentioned in an ethics code, smacked of a "lack of trust." Mr. Bates, she said, was looking at it as if somebody was getting something. Where was his faith in the Southampton public?

Another trustee said how are we going to keep the land developers from pulling the wool over our eyes if we don't have some of them on the board?

Oh, I dunno. Have experts in real estate on an advisory board?

In any case, the new "ethics code" was finally passed at the end of this meeting, and the board is congratulating itself for its good work in defining what is ethical and what is not ethical in the Village. But it does not address any conflict of interest of board members.

This is a Village, by the way, that in 2001 had on its payroll, a police officer who, last week, was arrested and charged with agreeing not to arrest certain women, in exchange for sexual favors. You can read about this in detail elsewhere in this issue. He joined the Southampton Town Police force full time in 2002. Now he faces fourteen charges of such behavior that an investigation says has been going on for five years.

I suppose at that level we don't just rely on "trust." The buying and selling of land is another matter, apparently, at a lower level, as far as civic trust is concerned. •

Expiration Dates

And You Thought They Could Remain in Your Pantry Forever

By Dan Rattiner

The other day in a magazine, I came upon a list of expiration dates for certain foods, liquids and beverages that are usually sold without expiration dates. For example, did you know that a can of Coca Cola, unopened, has an expiration date? It's nine months after they manufacture it. How about a can of unopened Diet Coca Cola? Three months. Now why is that? I've always been suspicious of whatever it is makes a Coca Cola a Diet Coca Cola. Suspicions confirmed. Whatever it is, it doesn't last long.

All the following expiration dates apply to things you buy that sit, unopened, in your house on a shelf. Ketchup is good for one year. Maple syrup is good for one year. Personally, I have bottles of maple syrup, unopened, in my pantry, from when Ronald Reagan was President. It's real good stuff. Came from endangered trees in the hills behind Booth Bay Harbor, Maine. I pop a bottle open for special occasions when I have guests.

Olive oil has an expiration date. I thought olive oil lasts forever. It lasts two years. I thought soy sauce lasts forever. It lasts two years. Canned tuna, unopened, is just good for a year. Explain this to me. What can get into, or for that matter, out of, an unopened can of Chicken of the Sea?

A show of hands, please. How many people believe that anything with alcohol lasts forever? Alcohol is alcohol. Think of eight-year-old Scotch. Or a twenty-year-old bottle of Chardonnay.

Well, you're on your own with alcohol. But a friend of mine, Bill Sokolin, who is a dealer in fine wine, once took an old bottle of wine he owned to a party of wine aficionados, just to show it off. It had been corked and sealed in 1787 and had been in a wine cellar at the home of Thomas Jefferson at Monticello. Bill, holding the bottle by its neck, turned to dodge a waiter, and hit the bottle on the back of a

THERE'S A JOB AT OUR HOUSE IF ANN WANTS IT

By Dan Rattiner

In the past month, Ann Coulter, on several occasions, has referred to Amagansett and East Hampton.

"(The Democrats) all want America to look like Amagansett, where they — the beautiful, rich people — live in their homes, and there are a few maids," she said on the Fox network. "Well-tempered maids who will come in and take care of them, bicycling to work. But they want to destroy the middle class of America."

On another occasion, in a column, she again made reference to the Hamptons.

"(Liberals) think they can live in a world of only Malibu and East Hampton — with no Trentons or Detroits."

Perhaps you don't know who Ann Coulter is. She is an attractive, blond, coltish looking young woman from a good family, who is Cornell-educated, well-spoken, well-mannered, fashionably dressed and polite, with ferociously expressed conservative opinions about everything. She's written a very aggressive anti-Democrat book, calling people names, like a bully would. It got her on television. Last week, she said something that even had Conservative Republicans heading for the exits. "I was going to have a few comments on the other Presidential candidate, John Edwards," she said, "but it turns out you have to go into rehab if you use the word 'faggot' so I guess I won't."

Is it possible that Ann Coulter has moved to the Hamptons? We made some phone calls. We've sent some feelers out.

I'm very excited that she might have moved here. I'd like to meet her and invite her over and get to know her. Maybe even interview her.

The reason is that I've got a position at my house opening up. Monique, our current maid, is going back to Paris, where her parents have enrolled her in the Sorbonne. Courses begin for her in September. So, if Ann comes over and we like each other at the interview, she'd have six months to wind up her affairs. I think she'd be just perfect. Though we can't have her insulting our guests. • metal chair. Now there was wine and broken glass everywhere.

People actually came running over to taste the spilled wine, getting down on their hands and knees and rubbing their fingers in puddles of it and then putting it in their mouths, and to hell with any broken glass. The wine tasted like mud.

How about peanut butter? Unopened. Two years. But who ever heard of peanut butter not getting opened for two years? Salad dressing? One year. Vinegar? Isn't that what everything turns to when it goes bad? No? A bottle of vinegar, unopened, goes bad in three and a half years. And turns to what? Go figure.

That about completes the survey of the things I wrote down from this list, except for one, which I will get to at the end of this article, which lasts FOREVER. And no it is not water. It's quite a surprise.

So I'm in Bob's Village Market, next to Dan's Papers, and I decide to buy a bottle of Fiji Water. I have been to Fiji and the place is indeed quite wonderful, with summer year round, gentle breezes and an ocean that is so clear you can see all the fish swimming around.

The tap water in Fiji is indeed as pure as what they put in the bottle, and it tastes the same too, a kind of satiny, soft, powdered coral reefy taste. Now, I could spend a lot of time talking about how wasteful it surely is to pack bottles of it into crates, put the crates into tankers, put thousands of gallons of diesel fuel into the gas tanks of the barges and tankers and motor tons of cases of Fiji Water to Bridgehampton (and tankers bringing our water to Fiji) but that's another story.

The real interesting news is that my bottle of Fiji Water, bought November 14, says it was bottled at 2:37 p.m. on June 28, 2006 in Viti Levu, a rather funky town that is the capital of that island, and it is "best used" by June 28, 2008 at 2:37 p.m., which, if my calculations of the time zones are correct, is actually 1:37 a.m. the next day here in Bridgehampton.

At which time, it does what? Explodes? Turns to vinegar? Well, it doesn't turn to vinegar. It just gets, I guess, funky and probably poisonous. So you throw it down the drain, where it goes through pipes to join all its fellow water molecules down in, well, the aquifer below the basement of the house, befouling it. And then it condenses into clouds and rains down on — what — Fiji?

Every once in a while, here at my house in East Hampton, I go on a tear, looking through the pantries and junk drawers with an eye to throwing out that which is beyond its expiration date. I have a philosophy about this, which is science, tempered by what I will call, for lack of a better word, old wive's tales.

For example, I will keep batteries one year after their expiration date, in the belief that the manufacturer puts on an expiration date that is short, by a year, of the date at which they actually expire.

I will throw out suntan lotion either after two years or after it first noticeably begins to separate into two different kinds of goo when you squeeze it.

I will NEVER throw out either aspirin or alcohol. Both, in spite of any instructions otherwise, will, in my opinion, last forever. Stick deodorant also lasts forever.

Prescription medication, I believe, will last twice as long as the written expiration date, except for antibiotics which expire precisely on the date noted.

And then there is perfectly good stuff in the junk drawer that has nothing to do with expiration dates. The other day I found a brand new little black plastic stand that was still in its clear plastic bag, in perfect new condition, designed to hold up a Nokia 1030 cell phone on a desk. They haven't made 1030s in almost ten years. But I couldn't throw it out. If I throw it out, sometime late tomorrow afternoon, somebody will call me. Happens every time.

"Have you seen that old Nokia cell phone stand that came with my old phone?" somebody will ask. Back it goes into the drawer.

As for food, anything in my pantry in an unopened bottle will last forever, in my opinion. It's dark in there. Dark has powerful preservationist powers. And bottles, especially bottles of sliced beets, are packed really, really tight.

I have been, periodically, very offended when a close friend or relative enters my pantry and, after re-appearing, shocked, says they are now doing me a big favor by throwing out all the old post-expiration stuff, including my

Which Team is Best?

Montauk, East Hampton, Southampton, Hampton Bays or Greenport?

By David Lion Rattiner

Southampton Town is building a skateboarding park in North Sea. The park is going to be approximately 14,000 square feet and have ramps, rails, benches and half pipes for the youth of Southampton to fly on their skateboards during non-beach days.

Chris Nuzzi, the Southampton Town board member that has spearheaded this project, thinks that work will begin in the coming weeks and the cost of the project is expected to be around $75,000.

This is very good news for Southampton Hospital, which will most likely be in charge of mending the various injuries that will happen from skateboarding. It is also good news for the youth of Southampton, because it will get them off of their X-boxes and into the outdoors.

Southampton is one of the last Hamptons to build a skate park. Montauk already has one off of Essex Street, which includes a drained swimming pool that skaters can ride around in.

East Hampton also has a skate park that was recently created on the Amagansett/East Hampton border. The park is located across the street from the softball field and indoor roller hockey rink. The park here has two pyramid ledges, three quarter pipes and an eight-foot half pipe that was all recently upgraded.

Greenport on the North Fork boasts the original Hamptons skate park. In fact, ten years ago, skaters from Southampton to Montauk, used to gather at Main Beach Surf Shop in Wainscott during the winter months in order to take a bus all the way to Greenport just to hit the rails at this particular park.

Hampton Bays also has a skate park located off of Old Riverhead Road in Red Creek Park. The park there is heavily used, and riders from as far as Westhampton gather there to show off their skills.

Oh, how things have changed.

So what does all of this mean? Well, it means

YOU'D THINK YOU WERE IN A FOREIGN COUNTRY...

By Dan Rattiner

You know how we make fun of Canada? How we say they are all a bunch of provincials only interested in things Canadian? Well, I can tell you, having visited here for the past two weeks, it is true.

It is so bad that unless you talk to somebody on the phone back home, you literally can't get any of what's happening in the rest of the world.

For example, here is what's on the front page of the Globe and Mail — its very name evokes faraway international news dispatches — the daily paper of Canada. I am in Vancouver, which is, in population, the size of Chicago, and you would think that this newspaper would keep the intelligencia of this great city fully informed.

The lead story is headlined ALL IMMIGRATION BY 2010, and it's about the just revealed fact, that the increase in the Canadian population is more and more being led by immigrants. In other words, whites in Canada aren't making enough babies.

Elsewhere on the front page, there's an article about how the Canadian PM is soft on crime, or so says a loyal member of the opposition. There's an article about how Canadian timber towns are among those suffering the fastest population decline. And there is an interview with the Mayor of Okotoks, a town of 17,000 in the Canadian province of Alberta, which is having the fastest growth rate of any town in Canada. The new population figures for Canada — Canada is one tenth the size of the U. S. in terms of people — is a really big deal and the Globe and Mail has sent out reporters far and wide.

Where are the stories about Iraq? About global warming? About Afghanistan? Ah, there is one about Afghanistan on page 4. An inves-

THE WOMAN WHO GOT A FREE UPGRADE TO FIRST CLASS

By Dan Rattiner

You know how hard it is to get an airline upgrade to first class? You try at the gate. You've been abused. You want justice. The answer is always no. Well, now there is the report of an elderly woman on British Airways, who, on March 19, finally succeeded in doing something on an airplane that got her a free upgrade. She wins the prize. So there is hope. How did she do it?

Well, she died in economy. It was of natural causes. It happens every once in a while that somebody passes away quietly like this.

But at the time, the aircraft was in the air between New Delhi and London and there were three hours still to go.

Instead of diverting the aircraft, the airline gave the woman an upgrade. According to Paul Trinder, 54, a businessman flying first class, he was awakened during the flight by the sounds of several airline attendants strapping a new arrival into the first class seat next to his. He watched as they wedged her in, or tried to wedge her in, with pillows.

"It really didn't work," Trindler told the BBC at Heathrow Airport, after he gave them a call and asked them to come down. "We'd go through some turbulence and the body would slide off the seat. So they'd prop her up again."

Sounds like an airborne sequel to Weekend With Bernie.

The BBC called the airline for comment, and they had none, but they did say that the death did happen on that flight, and, in addition to giving the dead woman the upgrade, they gave the person she was flying with an upgrade, so she, too, could enjoy the perks of First Class.

Trindler said the younger woman sat on the other side, mostly crying, which was quite understandable. The dead woman's identity has not been made public, in response to the expressed wishes of the family.

Well, it's been a terrible week for the airlines, mostly because of a computer glitch, personnel shortages and a terrible ice storm that hit the northeast. All of the above resulted in the continued pummeling of the customers, who had to endure more than 1,000 cancellations from Philadelphia to Boston and then tens of thousands of delays in addition to the cancellation of all flights on both Jet Blue and U. S. Airways last month each for several days due to coordination problems.

One passenger reported going through a remarkable four day ordeal for one single flight from here to there, with announcements throwing his departure time further and further into the future, when it was finally, at long last, boarded, sent out to the end of the runway for takeoff, and then called back to the gate because the plane just ahead of it in line was the last plane allowed out before the airport had to shut down on account of weather. If that wasn't bad enough, there was now a further delay getting the few thousand yards back to the gate because a plane in their path became frozen to its spot on the runway. It took two further hours to finally get around it and back to the gate where he, the longest and most patient customer other than that elderly woman on British Airways, was told sorry, your flight is no longer delayed, it is cancelled.

And then, this past Monday, there was the simultaneous arrival in both Los Angeles and JFK, of two prototypes of the brand new jumbo superplanes built by Airbus. These giant planes will carry 555 passengers on two decks, one above the other. But there has already been a two year delay due to construction errors, and that has thrown the delivery date for commercial service forward two more years, so that the first flight on this plane will be in 2010, instead of, as previously announced, 2006.

Another 555 poor souls to undergo further pummelings sometime in the future, is what I say. Bring them in by the carloads. They're probably camped out at the airport in Toulouse, France where the Airbus 380 is being manufactured, as we speak, waiting for the announcement. • one thing and one thing only. That the Hamptons needs to create skating leagues so that these kids can compete against each other for prize money and bragging rights. It would draw hundreds of people to the skating events and probably draw big name band acts as well.

These little skaters guys, who don signature baggy clothes, skating shoes, and caps have a powerful culture out here now. There is a big opportunity to create an organized league of road warriors.

They could even include other events too, such as trick inline skating and trick bicycling. If you have ever seen these guys do this on television, you can appreciate their skills as athletes, doing stunts that are difficult to even imagine, let alone actually perform.

Think about it. A league of skaters would be great for the kids. You could have the Montauk Maniacs, the East Hampton Boarders, the Hampton Bays Lip-hitters and the Greenport Gippers.

The kids would go nuts for this.

ESPN 2 would show up to cover the events and skate vendors could sell their goods at the park along with restaurant tables who could serve food. Prize money could come from local surf shops that would offer prizes such as new skateboard equipment or money. Maybe a big name sponsor like Quicksilver or Mountain Dew would be interested in something like this. After all, we have the skate parks all over the place now. We might as well use them to compete and see what happens.

It would be great.

A Montauk Surprise

Skinny Dipping, Music, Dance, Meditation at the Montauk Yacht Club

By Victoria L. Cooper

Montauk can be unpredictable in terms of weather, surf and what the daily specials are at Gurney's Inn, but the activities last weekend, set a new precedent. From Friday, March 9 at 4 p.m., to Sunday, March 11 at 11 a.m., a two-day dance music and freaky fashion festival termed the "Burning Beach Ball," took place at the Montauk Yacht Club. The event was sponsored by the International DJ Guild and Kostume Kult, which posted the event only on their website. As a result, most of Montauk and the East End were unaware of the party until phone-call tip-offs were made and music could be heard bellowing down Star Island Road.

Some of the happenings at the Burning Beach Ball event included a naked swim. What is most interesting is that many of the partiers are mainstream, business executives and professionals. Many of these prominent men and women attend events sponsored by the International DJ Guild and use it as a creative outlet. Many corporate events are held at the Montauk Yacht Club Resort and Marina, known as the perfect escape destination for travelers and those seeking a relaxing getaway at the foot of world-class beaches. Yet the Burning Beach Ball was anything but corporate.

The weekend was full of activities designed to build a temporary music community and to celebrate the arrival of spring. A schedule of artists, DJs and bands, assembled on two separate stages and provided entertainment for all in attendance. Partygoers were encouraged to purchase tickets for the weekend and rent rooms from the Yacht Club and surrounding motels like the adjacent Snug Harbor Hotel. A party bus and transportation were provided for those coming in from New York City and Brooklyn, but most people at the event were from Connecticut, New Jersey and the greater Metropolitan area. Some of the 300 guests who

THE LATEST NEWS AT STONY BROOK SOUTHAMPTON

By Alan-Michael Braveman

Stony Brook Southampton has now committed to finishing the new Library that Bob and Laura Sillerman initially helped raise the funds for, during the time Bob was serving as Provost of Southampton College. The Library was never completed due to the sale of the college to Stony Brook in October 2006. At the press conference on March 19, a beautiful rendering of the building was unveiled. Dr. Martin Schoonen, the Interim Dean, explained that the term "library "is almost a misnomer on today's campus. There are fewer stacks and journals in a modern collegiate library than ever before, since so much of the material students need are really electronically digitized documents that can be instantly downloaded right to a computer in a residence hall, or at any hot spot on campus."

This 29,600-square-foot building will be an environmentally friendly facility, with high-tech resources that will include wireless connectivity and multimedia capabilities, "changing the facility from a warehouse of information into a destination for learning." The Library will serve as an informal study center and information exchange, rather than just a place to just check books in or out, but will still be a quiet place to read or study. The Pollack-Krasner Archives will also be housed in the new building. And yes, there will still be lots of "real" books. Bob Sillerman's promise at the last graduation (May 2004) that this would be the best Library on any college campus.may well come true.

In addition to finishing the Library, there are a bevy of carpenters, painters, plumbers, electricians and engineers hard at work all over the campus. Newly completed offices abound in Chancellor's Hall, and as fast as they are finished, they are filled with admin-packed the Montauk Yacht Club and left it with no vacancy, traveled from places like Toronto, Virginia, and San Francisco.

The principals behind organizations, like the International DJ Guild and Kostume Kult, who are free-thinking DJs, are not common in today's elitist, capitalistic society. The companies are based in the New York area and find that there is a big difference between typical club goers and the underground dance community. They identify with the underground participatory dance culture and plan events, which are fueled by themes, like satire, absurd and irreverent humor, radical self-expression, civic responsibility and gifting. The community is inviting and welcomes and respects the stranger who participates, encouraging individuals to discover the idea of immediacy (the reality of participating in society in order to overcome barriers that stand between an individual and the recognition of his or her inner self). In many ways this is an important touchstone-value of this underground culture.

The entire weekend festival may look very much like the Burning Man, which is an annual experiment in temporary community, where participants are committed to radical self-expression, but it is not. Parties hosted by the International DJ Guild are not in any way connected with the Burning Man and in fact, Mike Rura, president of the International DJ Guild, feels that this is just a great way to throw a party. The International DJ Guild is commercial and in the business league, while the Burning Man is strictly not commercial, especially since the only things sold at the Burning Man are ice and coffee.

The Burning Man is held 120 miles north of Reno, Nevada, at the Black Rock Desert and takes place the week prior to Labor Day weekend. The event attracts nearly 40,000 people and the entire venue is dotted with mini-villages and theme camps, which often relate to the overarching theme of the festival. In the past, themes have included fertility, time, hell, outer space, and hope and fear. The theme for 2007 is the Green Man.

The stereotype surrounding many events like this include illicit drug use, group sex and other taboo activities, but it goes without saying that these organizations comply and support all local, state and federal laws. The International DJ Guild and Kostume Kult believe that because of this stereotype, many people who should be at these events, are not. They believe they are just left-of-center people who love to have fun and experience the joy of life. The organziers of the event, Mike and April Rura of the International DJ Guild and Jim Glaser of Kostume Kult, hope to be more involved in East End events as the season progresses. Perhaps this time around, there will be more people inspired to experience this modern day exodus into the world of no holds dance.

The Duke and Dutchess of Windsor and Mr. & Mrs. T. Markoe Robertson at what is now the Publick House in Southampton

Duke of Windsor

A King of England and the Time He Spent in Southampton

By T.J. Clemente

In social circles, the number one position socially is the King of England. Wealth alone does not guarantee you social position, although it helps getting there. In the Hamptons there is a mix of wealth and socialites. The families that have chosen to summer on the South Fork over the years read like Who's Who in America's social and economic history. It was quite a sight in Southampton years back when the private railroad car of Henry Ford was parked at Southampton train station for a whole week one summer, so that the great man could attend the wedding of his grandson, Henry Ford II, to a local Southampton girl. Movie stars like Gary Cooper, Clark Gable and Ginger Rogers, mixed with the rich socialites, even marrying into the families.

One dapper socialite in 1910 was Thomas Markoe Robertson, a graduate of Choate and of Yale. He was the brother-in-law of A.J. Drexel Biddle. "Markoe" was known for his wonderful tweeds and stylish tasteful ways. In fact, he was a competent architect who donated the designs that were used to originally build Southampton Hospital. It was not unusual to see Markoe squiring about with a tweed jacket with matching double-breasted waistcoat and flannel trousers. Markoe had many friends but the ace of his deck of friends easily had to be Edward, Duke of Windsor, formally King Edward VII of England. The very same King Edward who on Dec. 10, 1936, executed an "Instrument of Abdication," which gave the throne to his brother George, father of current Queen Elizabeth. Because of this, Edward lived abroad for the rest of his life, dying in exile in Paris in 1972 (although he is buried in Windsor Castle.) The reason behind this action was his love for an American, twice-divorced Mrs. Wallace Simpson, as he phrased it, "the woman I love."

Edward and Wally were summer guests of

SAG HARBOR GIVES UP THE IDEA OF HOLDING COURT

By David Stoll

Sag Harbor Village has decided not to create a Justice Court of its own, at least for now. Because the village has no Justice Court, when a person is arrested in that Village, all court appearances must take place in Southampton or East Hampton, not in Sag Harbor. This includes the arraignment, various status conferences and, if it gets that far, the trial. Depending on whether the person was arrested in the Southampton or East Hampton side of Sag Harbor, the Southampton Town Justice Court or the East Hampton Town Justice Court will handle the case. This arrangement has created certain problems, so Sag Harbor began considering creating its own Justice Court in 2005. However, many of those problems recently have been alleviated, or so it seems. For that reason, the Justice Court concept has been temporarily, and perhaps permanently, dropped.

The problems that sparked the drive toward having a Justice Court largely stem from the happenstance that Main Street, where most of the restaurants and bars are located, is on the Southampton side of the Village. Nearly 90 percent of all Sag Harbor Village arrests take place on the Southampton side and are sent to the Southampton Justice Court, which is already busy with Town cases. Because of a huge backlog of cases, often Court hearings are adjourned for months at a time, stringing out an already stressful process far longer than people reasonably might expect.

While these delays affect all people who appear before the Southampton Justice Court, not just those in Sag Harbor, Sag Harbor residents pay Village taxes and expect their representatives to provide, among other things, an efficient justice system. In addition, not having a Justice Court in Sag Harbor means that

Village residents must travel out of the Village 12 miles into Southampton (or sometimes 6 miles to East Hampton) to appear in Court. While many Town residents must travel an even greater distance, depending on where they live, they are not also paying Village taxes to live in a fairly tiny area.

Yet an additional problem exists. Because there is no Justice Court in the Village, anytime a Sag Harbor Village police officer needs to appear in court — such as to bring a prisoner to an arraignment or other hearing, or even to testify at a trial — the Village must pay for the travel, incurring added costs. To make matters worse, the Town of Southampton was giving serious consideration to moving the Justice Court from Hampton Road in Southampton Village to even further away, in Hampton Bays. This would exacerbate the travel-related cost and the inconvenience to Sag Harbor residents.

Since Sag Harbor began its consideration of creating a Justice Court for all of these reasons, some of the problems have resolved themselves, thanks to a series of decisions made by the Town of Southampton. Most importantly, the Town has added a fourth Justice to the Court. While a single Justice might not make a big difference to a large

Markoe at his home in the Ox Pasture section of Southampton. Herbie Edwards, now living in Virginia and married to Southampton's Dorothy Reminski for fifty-four years, recalled the two rounds of golf in August, 1944, for which he carried the Duke of Windsor's bags, while he played golf with Markoe at the National Links.

"He wore knickers," said Herbie, then all of fourteen years old and chosen because his dad had crewed for Harold Vanderbilt in the America's cup series aboard "Rainbow." The caddy master knew Herbie would behave properly. Herbie said, "He shot in the eighties, teeing off at about 2:30. The halfway house was closed due to the war, so they played 18 holes without refreshments. He had a warm smile and was friendly." But as was the custom, Herbie stood back and only suggested clubs when asked.

He was actually assigned to caddy for the Duke a second time when Gary Cooper's father-in-law, Wall Street scion Paul Shields, a neighbor of Markoe, joined Markoe and The Duke of Windsor. Herbie laughed as he recalled, "The Duke asked Mr. Robertson how much he should pay me and Mr. Robertson said two dollars, so he gave me two dollars. He walked up to the locker room to change and that was the last I ever saw him. I do have a photo of me holding his golf bag. He was thin, in good shape, about six feet tall."

Back in that era, during the war, what is now know as the Publick House in Southampton, was the establishment of Herb McCarthy at Bowden Square. Imagine the buzz in the room when Markoe walked in with his wife and Edward and Wally, the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. There had to be stares at the man who gave up the throne, being King of England, to marry the woman he loved, sitting right there eating dinner and laughing with old friends. In fact, there is a photo of all four posing at the entrance of what is now The Publick House.

It may be noted that Edward never in fact had a coronation because it was decided the Mrs. Wallace Simpson matter had to be dealt with first. He also spent time on Long Island in Locust Valley enjoying the links at Piping Rock.

So today the tradition of the summer season fusing the social scene between both socialites and the new champions of wealth, still playing on the same posh playgrounds and living in the same posh homes, continues. The ghosts of Marjorie Merriweather Post, Doris Duke, Paul Shields, Gary Cooper, Ginger Rogers, Clark Gable, Barbara Hutton, Howard Hughes and Henry Ford II must still drop by for a peek.

Who's Here

B. Smith

Lifestyle Expert

By Sabrina C. Mashburn

Although many Hamptonites may appear stylish to the outside world, B. Smith is the real deal and she has the credentials to prove it. Recognized by Elle Décor as one of America's ten most outstanding non-professional chefs, B. Smith has applied her culinary talents to three eponymous restaurants in New York City, Washington, DC and Sag Harbor, where she and her husband also have a summer home. Barbara, known as "B." to her fans, often enjoys Bay Street Theatre and taking walks along the wharf with her husband, Dan Gasby, since, she says, "Sag Harbor was one of the best kept secrets in the Hamptons." She and Dan chose Sag Harbor as the site of their second home because they were "enchanted with the beauty, history and sense of community we discovered together there."

Once they began spending time in the Village, they decided that Sag Harbor was "the perfect village to purchase a second home and raise our then young daughter." Her seasonal restaurant, B. Smith's on Long Wharf, was a natural progression once she and her family became a fixture in Sag Harbor. When the opportunity presented itself ten years ago, Barbara knew that she "couldn't resist opening a new restaurant at such a 'premier' waterfront location."

Along with her love for and talent in the culinary arts, Barbara has always been known for her sense of style. When she was just a teenager, she had a successful career as a fashion model, and earned the distinction of being the first African American model to grace the cover of Mademoiselle magazine, as well as the covers of fifteen other nationally and internationally-renowned fashion magazines. Though she now concentrates her talents behind the camera and on the design board, Barbara is still called upon to represent products, and is currently the face of Colgate Palmolive Oxy Plus dishwashing products and General Mills Betty Crocker Cornbread and Muffin Mix.

In 2001, Barbara launched the B. Smith With Style Home Collection at Bed, Bath and Beyond, hand-picking fabrics, patterns and artwork to complement the relaxed, Sag Harbor lifestyle she promotes in her books and on her television show. Some of her greatest design inspiration has come from spending time in Sag Harbor, as shooting her television show in the Hamptons "opened doors to homes, nurseries, gardens, yachts, fashion, food and just plain fun, from polo matches to parties to fundraisers." For other style influences, she loves "visiting designer show houses and rummaging through the store Yard Sale in East Hampton and Sage Street Antiques in Sag Harbor, to name a few."

Currently, Barbara is working on a home furnishing collection inspired by Sag Harbor, in partnership with La-Z-Boy's Clayton Marcus line, called "At Home with B. Smith." The collection will reflect her aesthetic of clean, modern shapes balanced by crisp, summery fabrics and antique details. Barbara is extremely excited about the launch of the furniture collection. "It's a natural evolution of my lifestyle brand," she says. Although the collection will debut at the International Home Furnishings Spring Market on March 26 in High Point, North Carolina, Barbara assures her devotees, "after the show, I hope to announce a retail home for my collection here in the Hamptons." The availability of her gorgeous, modern-preppy furniture in the Hamptons will ensure that B. Smith's gently chic touch will likely appear in many of the homes in which the inspiration for those pieces was first found. Along with designing her new furniture line, Barbara has also begun experimenting with jewelry, and has launched her own line of 14k gold and sterling silver jewelry for QVC called The B. court, the Town has expanded its Court fully by one-quarter, providing substantial relief to the other Justice and enabling the backlog to clear much faster.

In addition, the Town no longer plans to move the Justice Court to Hampton Bays. While this decision does not resolve the current travel inconveniences, at least things are not going to become worse. Also, the Town may install videoconferencing, if State Assemblyman Fred Thiele can push through legislation making video arraignments legal. This would enable Village police officers to attend arraignments from the Sag Harbor police station.

Establishing a Justice Court in Sag Harbor would be expensive, not only in up-front costs to create an appropriate space, but also in the ongoing costs of paying the various court officials. With all of the problems that had existed, the expense associated with a Village Justice Court seemed well worth incurring. But now that justice will be dispensed more quickly and videoconferencing may be in place by the summer — and with loud complaints about increasing Village property taxes — a Village Justice Court seems more like an extravagance.

Even so, the Village can revive the concept any time. The work that has already been done does not have to be repeated. Village officials will not make any further decision until the videoconferencing plan becomes a reality or is ditched. During the waiting time, they can consider whether the fourth Justice is making a big difference. If, down the road, it makes sense to create a Village Justice Court after all, the Village will simply pick up where it left off.

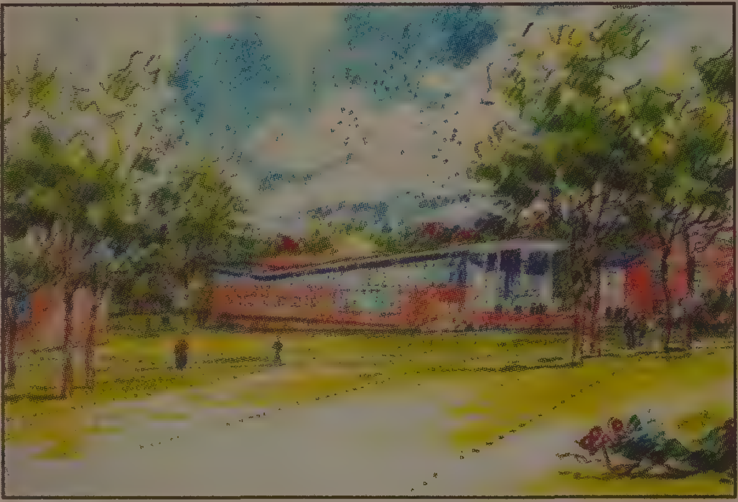
A Kayak club is also in the planning stages. More than one hundred new students fill the classrooms and hallways, taking classes in Astronomy, Playwriting, and Atlantic Marine History, along with an Art History class on the Age of Michelangelo. It is a wonderful sight to see as they begin to bring life to the heretofore dormant campus.



Renovations are also underway in The Fine Arts building, bringing modern technology and a refitted theater up to speed. There are a series of concerts and lectures planned for this summer in the Avram Theater, and the Art Gallery is expected to be in full swing again. Wood Hall will once again be home to the student center but this time it will also house a Wellness Center along with a cafeteria and a snack bar, as well as other facilities for student leisure activities.

Three of the campus Residence Halls will be refitted and ready for students enrolled for the fall semester. It is expected that at least 120 students will be in residence along with the most modern wireless technology available and air conditioning that works, as well as plumbing that functions quietly. In bygone days, some of the plumbing had been known to convulse and shake in such a loud manner that golfers at the Shinnecock course missed one -foot putts.

The main floor of the Gymnasium will be rescued from oblivion after the plumbing is repaired and then the main floor of the build-

TWENTYSOMETHING. . .

By David Lion Rattiner

Crying In A Movie

I watched three movies this past weekend and each struck me in different ways. Yes, this is my pathetic life.

I saw 300 over the weekend, a movie about 300 Spartans battling an army of millions and losing, but not until after killing a bunch of people. What drew me to the movie theater was the fact that so many other people had gone to see it and the fact that it is a Warner Bros. movie, and history has shown me that if anybody that says a Warner Bros. movie is good, then it is really good (Matrix).

And yet, I went to see the movie 300 and the only thing I could think about the entire movie watching experience, is that I need to do more sit-ups. All of the guys in this movie had like sixteen pack abs. It was really depressing. I almost felt like their abdominal muscles didn't do the movie justice because they were so distracting. This movie is supposed to be for men who like watching people get speared to death, not for women who like watching abdominal muscles flex.

On top of all of this, everybody with the super abdominal muscles dies. Which I guess is somewhat satisfying, but they are supposed to be the heroes.

What a depressing movie. I did some sit-ups before I went to bed Saturday night.

Sunday I was able to catch two movies, the first one being The Godfather, which I watched in the afternoon. After I saw this movie, I found myself sitting at my desk on the telephone talking for about three hours with an old friend from college who is going through a "quarter life crisis." Like the Godfather, I sat back in my chair and gave him some advice, which was advice that I personally should listen to. Why do we feel the need to give advice to people that we should listen to ourselves? It's ridiculous. I'm sitting there, telling him all of this stuff about life and being happy and not worrying so much, and here I am, just a day ago, unhappy that I don't have abdominal muscles like the guys in 300. Screw those guys. They suck. We need more movies like The Godfather, where everybody is pretty much normal looking or has too much body hair, but still manages to be a hero. That's the problem with movies these days. They are hiring way too many actors and actresses that are too perfect. Think about it. All of the good movies in the world had pretty much normal but charming people in them. Now it's like a freaking perfection freak show. What a bunch of crap.

Anyway, I found myself shamefully crying my eyes out to the movie Little Giants, a football movie about nine-year-olds who play very, very badly. Kind of like a Bad News Bears type of movie, but with football. I highly, highly, highly recommend that you watch this movie. Rick Moranis is in it, and I think that he hangs out in East Hampton sometimes.

It's pathetic, but there is this one scene where one of the kids scores a touchdown after running towards his Dad, who cuts work for the day to watch his son play in the game.

I was bawling. Literally bawling. Tears were coming down my face in a whirlwind of patheticness. And this was all happening about four hours after watching The Godfather and about one hour after thinking of myself as the Godfather.

Of course, like a comedy movie in itself, my cell phone started ringing. I checked to see the caller ID, it was my Dad calling from Canada. He is on vacation and has left me in charge of the dog, which by the way is a huge responsibility. You have to feed dogs every day! I never knew that. I thought that they just needed to eat like once every three days. Call me crazy, but I've never had to manage a dog before. But yeah, they have to be fed every day. And they are just like people, too. They get all bent out of shape when it's dinnertime.

Anyway, at this particular moment, my dog noticed me crying over the movie Little Giants, and he had snuggled up against me to make me feel better. What a great dog. This made me cry more.

"Hello?"

"David, it's Dad. What's wrong with you? You sound upset."

"No, I'm fine, everything is cool."

"Did you feed Moo?" (Our dog's name is Moo).

"Not yet (sob, sniffle) but I will."

"Okay, don't forget."

"I won't."

"By the way, I loved your writing this week."

He just had to say that at this particular moment, didn't he? I looked at Moo who cocked his head to the side and felt the welling of tears. What the hell was he looking at?

TWO VIGILS AND RALLIES HERE AGAINST THE WAR

This past weekend marked the 4th anniversary of the war in Iraq. Across the globe, thousands of people organized peace rallies, candlelit vigils and protest marches to support not only bringing the United States troops back home, but as an outcry to end the war. Here on the East End, a large support for the troops was evident through the two large-scale, free and open to the public events that took place.

The first event, Eyes Wide Open: New York, scheduled to take place Friday, March 16, but postponed until Monday, March 19 because of the inclement weather. Eyes Wide Open is an exhibit presented by the Social Justice Committee of the Unitarian Universalist Congregation of the South Fork and the Peconic Bay Friends Meeting. The display, which took place during daylight hours at the Bridgehampton Monument, was very dramatic and moving. The presentation consisted of 145 pairs of empty combat boots, tagged with the names of New York soldiers who have died in the Iraq War, as well as an additional display of 50 pairs of shoes representing the thousands of Iraqi civilians who have died during the conflict.

Eyes Wide Open is a project sponsored largely by the American Society of Friends (AFSC), a low cost but innovative exhibit on the human price of war, created by two Quakers from Chicago. Michael McConnell, Director of AFSC in the Great Lakes region, is an ordained minister in the United Church of Christ, and Chuck Hutchcraft, is a coordinator for Friends in the Midwest, with experience working at Chicago newspapers. Both men were interested in the idea of representing the human cost of war to the American public and have assembled this memorial throughout the country from coast to coast.

It was evident that people passing by, whether in a car or on foot, were shocked and moved by the visual intensity of the display, which allowed someone to see just how many local New Yorkers have died in what seems to be an endless war.

The other event, which I not only attended but participated in as well, was a candlelight vigil and peace rally in Sag Harbor also on Monday, March 19. The vigil, coordinated by Pamela Topham, a MoveOn.org Political Action member, was a part of MoveOn.org's one thousand candlelight vigils across the nation honoring those American soldiers who were wounded or killed in Iraq through a reading of personal accounts written by family members.

Situated by the flagpole and Long Wharf in Sag Harbor, more than seventy people, with signs calling for peace and an end to senseless death, stood in the cold and wind. White carnations were handed out and white crosses to honor fallen troops were placed in the ground. MoveOn.org realizes that now more than ever, people are reflecting on the war in Iraq and that it is essential to push Congress to consider a real deadline to bring our troops home. At the vigil, there was much discussion and sharing of thoughts on the war, and mostly everyone agreed that a real change in course is needed. East End residents Linda and Dan Leahy read personal, written accounts of their struggles and opinions that were very touching.

What I first noticed and also what Linda Leahy pointed out, was that there were not many young people, beside myself, at the vigil. Women with signs that read, "Grandmothers for Peace," lined the sidewalks, but I am almost positive I was the only twenty-something there. Perhaps this is just a coincidence or perhaps this is a true reflection of my generation and the apathy it seems to hold. Regardless, it is amazing to see people in their sixties and seventies commemorating this sad, sad, event.

So it's been four years. Will there be four more?

The Sheltered Islander

The Sheltered Islander #440

Overdue!

Man pays 30-year-old school fees (AP Sun Mar 18, 12:52 AM ET)

Jeff Rolson is just relieved he didn't get sent to the principal's office. The 40-something Rolson last week dropped by Superior Senior High School, where he graduated in 1977, to get a copy of his transcript for a plumbing apprenticeship. That's when he found out he had two outstanding debts — $7.95 for a missing algebra book and $5 for an unpaid physical-education fee.

A secretary told him he had to pay up before he could get his transcript.

"I told her, 'Do you realize this was 30 years ago?'" he said.

Rolson says he doesn't understand why the school didn't contact him earlier. He still lives in Superior.

"Nobody contacted me, so I ended up paying the $13 to get my transcript," he said.

Rolson caught one break, though. "She did forget the $2 fee for the transcript," he said.

I had to laugh at this because I recently had a similar experience at our library.

My son, who shall remain nameless, wanted to get a replacement library card. He couldn't, because he was informed that his mother, who shall remain blameless, had not returned a dinosaur book she checked out for him in 1997.

I called the Library to inquire about this book that I had no memory of whatsoever. But they said I had to turn it in or pay for it. Being a renter on Shelter Island, I have moved six times since 1997. Try as I might to be organized, I lose things with every move. The chance of my finding a book from ten years ago was less than finding the other four place settings of my china, which I haven't seen for the past two house moves.

My son listened as I pleaded my case over the phone, saying it was unreasonable to make me pay for a book checked out ten years ago. But noooooo... rules is rules! I owed for the book, plus a penalty, plus $5 replacement fee for the new card. I think it came to $35. I was irked.

Over the next few days, I looked through several boxes, just hoping. Hell, maybe I'd find something else I lost. I had my son look through the boxes with me. No luck.

I was very loud as I expressed my frustration over the whole situation. My son remained silent as usual. Without thinking, and not really expecting an answer, I yelled out to him in his room, "I don't suppose YOU have any idea where that book is?"

I have to pause here and say that God has given me two gifts that have saved my life and the lives of my children countless times. First, I have the gift of humor. Things strike me funny that other people never even notice. And secondly, patience. I can out wait a rock. I never thought of either of these two features as gifts until God gave me an autistic child. Now, it is clear to me why I needed to have these two gifts.

Returning to my story, I yelled, "I don't suppose YOU have any idea where that book is?"

"Yeah," came the flat answer from behind the door.

"Whaddaya mean "yeah"?" I shrieked. "Didn't you hear me telling the library lady that I didn't know where the book was? You helped me look through boxes for it !!! Why didn't you say something if you knew where the book was all this time?"

"You didn't ask," came the simple, toneless response. He was absolutely right, I didn't directly ask HIM if he knew where the book was.

A normal woman, without the gift of mindless humor and patience, would have thrown a chair at this kid — and rightfully so. Or at least beat him senseless for watching her burn up hours looking for a book — a book he produced immediately upon demand.

"Thank you," I said as he handed me the book and I started to laugh. "Listen, sweetie, in the future, when you see Mom going crazy looking for something, and you happen to know where it is, it's really okay to tell me. I would love it, if you would do that in the future."

"Okay," he said and returned to his video game, clueless about my consternation.

We returned the dinosaur book to a very surprised librarian, and got a him a new library card.

In the future, I will always ASK FIRST.

SOUTHAMPTON POLICE OFFICER INDICTED ON 14 CHARGES

On Wednesday, March 4, Southampton Town Police Officer Guy Giammatteo was charged with 14 separate offenses, including four counts of bribe receiving, which is a felony, three counts of second degree coercion and seven counts of official misconduct, both misdemeanors. Officer Giammatteo has been accused of revealing the time and place of narcotics investigations to one woman in exchange for fellatio and sex, revealing confidential information regarding the identities of officers involved in undercover narcotics and alcohol investigations to a Southampton club owner on two separate occasions. He was also charged with failing to execute warrants for another woman's arrest, also in exchange for fellatio and sex. He was also accused of responding in uniform to a domestic incident at a woman's home and exposing himself to her, then pulling her over in her car later that week to tell her not to report the incident. Giammatteo pleaded not guilty to all charges and was released on $10,000 cash bail. He is currently suspended with pay from the police force. His attorney, William Keahon, of Islandia, stated that the charges brought against his client are a ploy by murderer Danny Pelosi to destroy Officer Giammatteo's family life from behind bars. Officer Giammatteo is married to Mr. Pelosi's sister, Joan.

We depend on police officers for protection. Their job is dangerous and many officers perform above and beyond what is expected of them. We presume that where it turns out there is one bad apple, the matter will swiftly be made right in the courts. — SM tigation has shown that Master Corporal Robbie Fraiser of Ottawa, who died outside of Kabul ten months ago, might have been killed because the safety on one of his mate's guns was not latched.

Other stories inside the paper on page 2 and 3, where a big metropolitan daily in New York might have a story about Russia's President Putin, the decision about whether or not to build a space station on the moon or the quality of China's automobiles, there is a story about some sixteen-year-olds in Winnipeg who stole cars and tried to run down joggers, and a University of New Brunswick physicist who remains baffled as to why he was detained by border authorities when he tried to visit California in 2004.

Chris and I have been traveling through the Canadian Rockies for the past two weeks. It's a vacation. But whenever we go on vacation, to Paris or Capetown or London, we always try to stay fully informed. And you always CAN stay fully informed.

Not here in western Canada. So what's going on? Has Giuliani been nominated by the Republicans? Is the "surge" working in Baghdad? Did the Knicks make the play-offs? Are we going to the moon? How's the Freedom Tower going?

We can't find out any of this sort of stuff here. Even the sports is about Canada. Canucks can't hold off Edmonton. Somebody beat somebody in Cricket. A Vancouver runner unexpectedly finished fifth at the Commonwealth Games.

Well, don't tell me everything is local because Canada isn't a player on the world stage. Neither is Sweden or Lebanon or Costa Rica. And in all those places you can at least get the New York Times. You'd think this place was a foreign country or something.

Well, we'll be home soon. ● vast collection of expired cans of Campbell soup I am keeping in there. I have ordered people out of my house who have said they will do this.

Reach for the Campbell's, it's right on your shelf, is my slogan. I have cans in there from when cars had tailfins. Had one just the other day. Mixed a canful of water into it, stirred and heated it. Delicious.

As for the refrigerator, I have a whole other set of rules that apply. If it was taken home in a doggie bag from a restaurant from the night before, no matter how good it was, I won't eat it. It was just for show that I brought it home. Didn't want to offend the waiter. Now it is icky, used food. Throw it out. Or give it to the dog.

Here's the rule for beverages. Any beverage that is beyond the expiration date gets the sniff test. If it passes the sniff test, it is fine. Pour it into a glass slowly. If no clump of grey stuff blops out into the glass, drink it.

Beer never goes bad. Vodka never goes bad. Fruit juice, especially grapefruit juice, never goes bad. Fruit juices are tart and acid. Acid lasts forever.

Your dog's dog food expiration date is exactly double and then double again the human expiration date as printed on the same food, because dogs have evolved over the ages, foraging through the woods for food, to have iron stomachs. Dogs also have hair trigger noses that are as smart as Obiwan Kenobi. You never see a dog who ate something that went bad. It just isn't something you have to worry about.

The thing that this study says lasts forever? Mayonnaise. Believe it or not. It might change color a bit. So if it is 100 years from now and you are old and decrepit and decide you'd like to have some mayonnaise, go get the jar and if it looks a bit green or blue, don't worry. It's just the coloring. The stuff inside is as delicious as it ever was. And it always will be, too. ●

For the coming fall, over one hundred student applications from all over America have been received, and they continue to pour in.

This concept of teaching sustainability for a modern world through an interdisciplinary curriculum that integrates principles and methodologies, from the social sciences, engineering, the natural sciences to the humanities, is what will attract the new students. It will make Stony Brook Southampton an exciting place to go to college. The students who choose to attend will be handed a truly unique opportunity — a college campus where students and faculty can grow and create the culture and life of a new college, and a campus where they can help to shape destiny and make the world a better place to live. Stony Brook Southampton will be a truly "green" campus and the supporting curriculum will encourage students to study in a manner that will prepare them for the real world. This is an impressive goal that is fast on the way to becoming a reality.

Here Comes The North Fork Ball Players

North Fork Baseball Beginning To Heat Up

By Phyllis Lombardi

I take it back. Recently I wrote that North Forkers don't use four-letter words. That our vocabulary was above reproach. In our conversation, we were the model of decorum.

Now I ask your forgiveness. As I travel the North Fork these spring days, I hear a couple of four-letter words over and over again. Mostly uttered by young people gathered in groups of 20 or so. But every now and then an adult repeats the very same words. And no objections ever seem to be raised.

How has this happened? A little detective work led me to Southold High School and what's going on there. Sundays, Mondays, always, it seems. But especially on Sunday nights.

Now Southold High School is set right down in the middle of a pleasant residential area, just a half street away from Main Road where a police officer often directs traffic and where several churches look to the skies. Yet those four-letter words are shouted out week after week. Guess the neighbors see no harm in what they hear. The four-letter words are PLAY BALL.

Those words begin the 5-8 p.m. Sunday sessions of the independent traveling/tournament team, the "All League Hitmen." These Hitmen are young people ages 10-18, who meet in the school's gym for baseball, baseball, baseball. They come from Riverhead, Mattituck, Southold – all over the North Fork and beyond. Their coach/manager is Brian Hansen and the kids love him about as much as they love our national game. Easy to understand why.

The Hitmen traveling team has been around for some time (although the name is new this very season). Winter and spring indoor practice gives some idea of the players' dedication. Come 5 p.m., the boys (no girls this year – who knows why?) start running laps around the gym. That's followed by warm-up tosses and the let the games begin. Well, not really a game but batting, pitching, and fielding techniques and practice.

Brian, a certified baseball coach, attends a coaching convention in Connecticut each year. And listen to this. He'd just returned from Port St. Lucie, Florida, where he spent a week at the Mets spring training camp. Talk about Meet the Mets! Brian caught up with Willie Randolph in Camille's Deli. Camille's is like Riverhead's Panera Bread, said Brian. No, Brian did not notice what kind of sandwich Willie ordered. That disappointed me. But he did talk with Omar Minoya. Omar wasn't eating.

Back to the gym where I talked with Noreen Stepnoski of Southold. She's a baseball mom (is that like a soccer mom?) whose three sons, Pat, Matt and Connor, are Hitmen. That sounds pretty scary to me. Anyway, Noreen is an essential part of the group. She recruits, registers, arranges travel. In the past, the team has played in Connecticut, Florida and Colorado. Where do they play their home games? Jean Cochran Park on Peconic Lane in Peconic. When do they play? In July and August – 16 games.

And what kind of a game do they play? Pretty darned good, I'd say. Listen to the whack of bats as the helmeted boys connect with the pitches thrown in by Brian (a righty).

There was some fancy footwork, too. In one instance, Southold's Robbie Clausen, 15, was instructing his brother Kyle, 12. The Robbie-maneuvers might teach Derek Jeter a thing or two.

Are the boys long-ball hitters? Well, some are. Dimitri Rauseo of Mattituck, for example. But Brian's not pushing them for home runs. I liken Brian's approach to Joe Torre's well publicized small ball. Matter of fact, Brian spends considerable time teaching the young athletes the beauty of a bunt. Coach says his favorite play is the suicide squeeze. You have to see it.

After three hours of a workout like this, you'd think Brian and the boys would be exhausted. Not so. The boys finish off the session with a half hour of shooting baskets and then all agree they're hungry, starved. Pizza is the only answer. As for Brian? Well, for an old guy with three baseball-playing sons of his own, he's in pretty good shape. Maybe that's because he still plays ball, too – for Riverhead's Digger O'Dell's.

Brian and the young Hitmen welcome new members. Right now they're looking to add some catching depth. So if you know a Campy, a Yogi, a Tim – or any youngster who loves and wants to play baseball, any position, Brian's phone number is 765-4709. Or call Noreen at 765-6997.

As I drove home on our quiet roads that Sunday night, I thought of the baseball I'd just seen. Only thing missing were peanuts and crackerjacks. And I knew for sure a longer drive to Cooperstown wasn't really necessary if I wanted to pay homage to dedication on the mound, at the plate, in the field. I could do that right here on the North Fork.

Puppy Love

The Story Of A New Puppy With A New Owner

By Nancy Keeshan

Our family always had pets. How can you grow up on the North Fork without one? In fact, at one point we had two dogs, a parakeet, tropical fish, a hamster and of course, a cat. The hamster and the cat were mine. I loved them both, but hamsters are short lived. The cat was special. Her name was Robby. I named her for a boy I was in love with in the first grade. Anyhow, Robby was a red striped Tabby, a run of the mill housecat. I got her after my cousin's cat had just one too many kittens. The rest was history.

She was not what you would call a social cat. She mostly kept to herself, and I never once heard her purr the way most cats do. She ignored the rest of the family and when anyone came visiting she would hide. Robby and I, however, had a bond. She sat only with me; slept on my bed and every so often I even got cat kisses. She made me feel special and the love affair we had lasted until shortly after I went off to college. At which time mom became her caretaker and she will now admit that she, too, loved the darn cat right until the last day. When I arrived home for school break day, Robby was gone and a chapter of my life was through.

Fast forward a few pages and after years of living a life of independence, with lots of freedoms, no commitments, I somehow got it into my head that it was time for my own pet. I bought a goldfish. I just called him simply Mr. Fish.

Well, the goldfish has taken on a life of it's own, living in a 6 gallon tank in my kitchen. Don't get me wrong, he is a remarkable fish, it's just that a cold fish was just not doing it for me in the pet department. Somehow, I just couldn't "feel the love."

When out of the blue an even more seemingly hair-brained idea wormed its way into my head. I should get a dog. No, I don't want to be the type that talks endlessly about their dog, buys it expensive sweaters and takes it everywhere...but maybe it could work.

Yes, it would be a real commitment, but it seems that every time I said the word, "DOG" to myself, it sounds better and better.

What really got me going was an amazing book that I finished reading a few weeks back, "Marley and Me." It is a wonderful story about a man and his dog. It made me laugh. It made me cry. It got me thinking. This could definitely work.

All this being said, I took a poll amongst my friends.

"To get a dog or not to get a dog...that is the question."

It's a leap for sure. Most of my friends are "dog" people and they were very excited by the prospect of me becoming a part of the "dog culture."

Yet, there were a few pessimists there in the mix, you know who you are, who say, "Are you crazy?" "It's such a responsibility!" "You'll be tied up for a good 15 years!"

These people scared the life out of me.

My parents were all for the dog idea, no big surprise, and what do you know, Christmas was just around the corner.

I waited. I would make no decisions. I would put it out there and let fate take its course.

Christmas arrives.

Everything was unwrapped. Hey, I got a few nice sweaters, new pajamas, a book, but, alas, no fuzzy face under the tree, no pitter-patter of four little feet at the house. Ho-hum, time to round up some new filters for Mr. Fish. But wait, one more gift, under the tree for me? It was a photo...... it was her, my dog...all two lbs of her. My puppy was waiting for me to take her home. The fates had spoken after all......that and my parents had taken a leap of faith.

Talk about feeling the love. As I sit and write this, my little pup is lying across my lap. I tried to put her down but she kept giving me those eyes. You know the kind.

That's the love.

Getting a dog is a big decision, but one that if you are truly ready, you won't regret. I found that it's not like anything else. Sometimes you just have to go for it and you know what? Your life will never be the same. As John Grogan says in his book Marley and Me, "A dog judges others not by their color or creed or class but by who they are inside. A dog doesn't care if you are rich or poor, educated or illiterate, clever or dull. Give him your heart and he will give you his. It's really quite simple, and yet we humans, so much wiser and sophisticated, have always had trouble figuring out what really counts."

If you are looking for a guide on getting a dog, pick up a copy of The Dog Bible by an East Hampton author Tracie Hotchner. It's a great resource. Also pick up a copy of Marley and Me and perhaps it will change your mind as well. PS. I've already bought an expensive sweater and have been taking her most places with me.

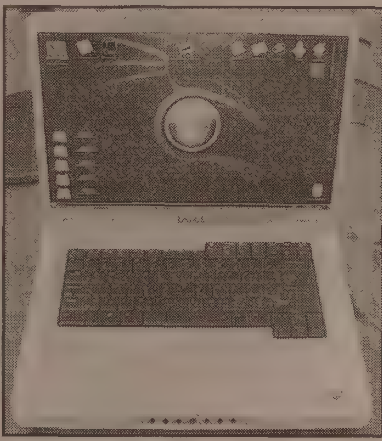
OVER THE BARREL...

with Lenn Thompson

Learn Wine on the Internet



We all know that you can buy books, book vacations and even order groceries on line these days. But, in recent years, the online resources one can find to learn about wine have multiplied exponentially.

And while the "big guys" in wine publishing like Wine Spectator, Decanter and Wine Enthusiast all have website (of varying quality), wine blogs are the most exciting frontier in online winedom.

For those of you that don't know, a blog—short for web log—is a website that is usually run by a single person (or small group) where stories are posted in a journal style and displayed in reverse chronological order. The best combine quality writing, passion for their subject matter and interesting commentary and/or opinion.

Also of the blog movement came things like podcasts (audio) and vlogs (video blogs), which also offer unique looks at topics that range from knitting to baking to cancer to our topic today—wine.

These are just a few of the best blogs, podcasts and vlogs available on wine. There are literally hundreds of them out there—so check out a few and see if any of them appeal to you.

In the video blog category, it's hard to do it any better than Wine Library TV (tv.winelibrary.com). Tied to online wine retailer WineLibrary.com, host Gary Vaynerchuk blends down-to-earth attitude, infectious energy and a deep understanding of wine in each of his almost-daily episodes. I dare you to watch just once—Wine Library TV is that addicting.

Wine blogs come in as many flavors as there are styles of wine, but for general-purpose wine information—with a healthy dose of passion that borders on obsession—visit Vinography (vinography.com). Founded and run by San Francisco resident Alder Yarrow, Vinography represents wine blogging at its finest. There are detailed wine reviews, event information and blunt, to-the-point commentary that is always refreshing and well thought out.

Recent winner of Best Wine Blog and Best Wine Blog Writing in the 2007 American Wine Blog Awards, Dr. Vino (drvino.blogspot.com) is published by Tyler Colman who actually is a doctor (he has a Ph D) and he definitely knows his wine. With a wide array of content, Dr. Vino is a veritable one-stop-shop if you only have time to read one wine blog. He also teaches wine classes at NYU.

There are also wines that have very specialized content. For instance Tom Wark's Fermentation blog (fermentation.typepad.com) is maintained by Tom Wark, who owns and runs a PR firm in California wine country. He can always be counted on for up-to-the-minute information on various industry topics, including shipping laws, wine trends, label and branding issues and of course winery promotion and public relations. It's a blog that is definitely worth a daily read.

Regionally focused wine blogs are among the most interesting and useful. They cover wine regions that either go ignored—or nearly so—by larger media outlets.

Interested in Spanish and Portuguese wines? Check out Catavino (catavino.net)

If you love Italian wines, visit mondosapore (mondosapore.com), published by a teacher in New York City.

Virginia wines are gaining popularity in wine circles these days and Dezel of Virginia Vine Spot (vinespot.blogspot.com) does an outstanding job bringing his local wine country to his readers.

And, I'd be remiss if I didn't mention my own blog here, LENNDEVOURS.com, where I focus on the wines of not only Long Island, but the entire state of New York.

There's even a blog for lovers of boxed wines. The Box Wine Blog (boxwines.org), as its name suggests focuses on affordable wines that are often found in alternative packaging like boxes, cans and the like.

Again, these are just some examples of what the wine blogosphere has to offer. For a near-comprehensive list of wine blogs, visit Wine Blog Watch (wineblogwatch.arrr.net).

And, keep an eye out this summer for a Dan's Papers wine blog.

Starting The Season On Time!

Tips And Tricks To Get Your Boat In The Water On The North Fork

By Bill Lieblein

Planning for St. Patrick's Day activities is a sure sign that the start of boating is just around the corner. In fact, if you are an avid boater or hope to become one, it is high time you've made arrangements for getting your boat in smooth working order. With the advent of more intricate engines and the lack of free time, most of the prep work is now by professionals. But even they need a little heads up time to schedule all the boats for a timely spring launch. One of the things ownership entails is the yearly maintenance of your investment. As in other things in life, preventative maintenance extends the usefulness of an object, but in the case of boating it also ensures more useable boating time. You sure don't want to have down time later for the cost of a fix now. The season is too precious to do repairs after it's in full swing.

The following procedures are recommended to maintain your boat in general and alert you to potential problems and/or to insure a problem free season, according to Will Lieblein, General Manager at Port of Egypt Marine, out in Southold, NY. Check your gear case and /or crankcase oil levels before launching. If your engine has a bad gasket, you could have a leak during the winter, that if undetected in the spring, could lead to a bad lower unit. There is also the chance that air bubbles rising during the winter could keep the oil below the recommended level setting for the gearcase. Adding even a few ounces doesn't take that long and then you know you are topped off properly.

Keep an eye on expanding gas, sometimes the boat is put away with too much gas and when it warms up in the spring, the gas seeps out of the gas fill or gas vent. This happens more often than you think. Check thru hull seacocks for proper handle position and MAKE SURE THE DRAIN PLUG IS IN! Have the battery(s) fully charged. Remove and clean the battery posts and terminals. Clean the wire and cable terminals, install and secure them properly, then spray the terminals with Proclean. Test run the engine and check engine temperature. Note all the gauge readings. Check the remote control and steering operation. Bay test and check all accessories including the bilge pump auto float switch. Check the warning horn system. Add ring free to the gas. If you do your own work, complete that list. If you authorize work don't skip in these areas. If you don't want to have down time during the season this is not the time to skimp.

Have the boat cleaned properly. This means cleaning and waxing using a wheel so the product is worked into the fiberglass. Like anything else experts have their favorite products and methods to do the job right. If you are doing it yourself, even though it takes more time and effort, use a paste wax to get the longest lasting finish. If the boat is not too chalky or relatively new, then a liquid type wax is all right.

There is more direct sunlight on the top deck and gunnels so spend adequate time there. Clean the vinyl with a spot cleaner for tough stains and a milder vinyl cleaner for large areas. Apply a sealer with UV protectorant in it. For cloth cushions follow the old rule of testing a small spot first, then use a bleach applied with a toothbrush or cut off paintbrush. This allows a slightly stiff brush but not enough to harm the cloth. Rinse well as you finish block areas.

On the brightwork use "Nevedull" or "Flitz" style cleaner protectors. Remember that soap will later remove the polish so rinse the t-top and rails after every use. And reapply protective coating if you have used a soap cleaner.

NY Laws require a pesticide permit to apply paint. The whole procedure has some toxic aspects so don't take this into your own hands. There is a reason they require yearly update classes and monitoring. Let the experts take care of the painting of your hull. Get started early to plan a great season and remember that every day is a day closer to Spring!

JUST FOR KIDS

EAST END KID: BUNNY HOP

BY EMILY HART POST
With a little help from Katlean de Monchy and David Post

Dad and I went to the Bunny Hop at FAO Schwartz, which helped to benefit Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center. It is always one of my most favorite events and as usual, I worked my way into Magic Al's show. There was a line to get in and it was crowded inside too. We started with some food – hot dogs. We then walked around and saw the toys and people demonstrating the toys. Then I went to see Sam and Tootie, Al, and Laughing Pizza and saw three of my friends from Chapin. Before I knew it, time was up and it was time to go home. I have found that when things go fast, they must be fun. This sure was fun!

Spring is in the air and I think I'm done with winter! Although I love the cold weather, I need some spring flowers and green trees to keep me going. We're almost there – so let's do some spring shopping.

When In Manhattan...

By Oliver Peterson

Night Kills the Day

I have led an imperfect life. In the years since my quasi-adulthood began at age eighteen, bad decisions have been made – but in the end, I landed on my feet. The same could be said of my friend, Luke Brian. The theater of his self-destruction and eventual rise to what some might call the early stages of glory has been quite a show. It feels like not so long ago that I watched him hobbling around on a broken leg, from a car crash he shouldn't have survived, with pinprick pupils, as he related stories of his recent visit to the methadone clinic and his amphetamine hallucinations. My friend was a junky, pure and simple. There weren't a lot of people with much hope for Luke. I never saw him that way. The guy was a sensitive, smart, talented individual with ambition and big dreams to match. Since our days at Southampton High School, Luke always said he was going to be a rock star. Unbelievably, against all odds, he's become just that.

His band, Night Kills the Day, begins their North American tour in support of their debut album, The Study of Man...and the Developed Shadow, the day this paper hits the street. By the time you read this, it will be impossible for you to make the Toronto show date, but lucky for us, they'll be returning home to Manhattan for one gig before sweeping the East Coast and then heading west.

Luke Brian has come a long way since hustling pharmacists, copping dope and disappearing into the blackness of the New York City after-hours scene.

Night Kills the Day

His band and their music have played a big part in Luke's transition from folding to becoming the guy with the winning hand. He calls the members of his band, lifelong best friend and bassist Timothy Falzone, guitarist Izzy Llugo, and drummer and "real man" Roger Benton, an "open-minded, cool group of guys with similar views on life." Falzone wears a tattoo of a William Blake illumination as an illustration of his reverence for the poet. Luke is the son of a Franciscan Brother and a Dominican nun who left their orders to consummate their love. Like Blake, and assumedly Falzone, Luke is deeply concerned with theology, faith and man's quest for God in a world fraught with darkness, temptation and cruelty. It's in his blood.

Night Kills the Day's songs are based on the expansion of these concepts and a collection of brutal, disarming life experiences set in the underbelly of New York. The devilishly handsome front man describes The Study of Man... as the first part of a trilogy of themed albums. It's the Inferno of Luke Brian's Divine Comedy. Luke has always been a poet. His experiences have changed, but the ideas are the same. At nine years old, he learned of his father's death at the hands of a drunk driver. The exacerbation of Luke's own fear and pain followed for years, until he began cleaning up his act and bearing down on music, his true calling. It was no accident that my friend totaled four cars, as chronicled in one of the heavier tunes on the record, "Enjoy the Ride." He went to war with God. I think they're at peace today, regardless of the darkness portrayed in NKD's music.

Night Kills the Day will be playing at the Bowery Ballroom in Manhattan (6 Delancy Street) at 8 p.m. on Saturday, March 24. Their debut record, The Study of Man...and the Developed Shadow will be available everywhere April 10. The album is a lyrical, catchy and strong and the live shows never fail to rock.

Now married and living his dream, Luke Brian has taken the ugliness of his life and, with his band, has made something beautiful, powerful and true. To see and hear more, Google "Night Kills the Day," or check them out on www.MySpace.com.

Classic Cars

With Bob Gelber

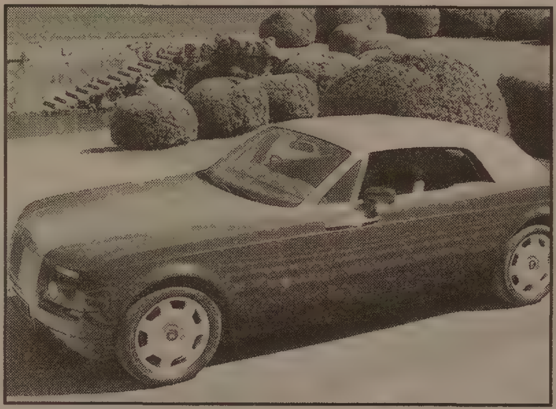
In the late fifties, a famous headline for a Rolls Royce print ad read, "The stigma of high price is soon forgotten, but the quality lingers on." This was during an era when a spanking, new Rolls Royce Silver Cloud listed for $12,500. However, that statement is very true today. Quality is very important in virtually everything. I agree with many yacht brokers, whose advice to many buyers is to buy as much quality as they can afford.

When it comes to automotive quality, I have to admit that Rolls Royce and its sibling, Bentley, are still the leaders of the pack. In fact nobody does it better than the British when it comes to scrumptious interiors. Jaguar's a close third. Over the years, famous British automakers have been killing more trees and cattle to appoint cars than any other company. Maybe that's why you can't get a good steak anywhere in England. There is more leather and wood in one Rolls Royce than there is in Ralph Lauren's den.

For years, other luxury car manufacturers have been trying to catch up with the British. Mercedes Benz has gotten close, but always seems to fall short because of its Teutonic build quality. You know what I mean, the German leather is either too hard or the wood is so perfect it looks like plastic.

The new kids on the block, the Japanese contenders, try their best to put a British ambiance into their cars' interiors, but somehow the sweat shows. Maybe it's pedigree. These guys are just too new to the game. Tokyo at night has a long way to go before it looks like Trafalger Square.

For a while, all British cars featured wood and leather interiors. Even the entry level sports cars like the MG, Triumph and Austin Healey, featured wooden dashboards, or facias, and leather covered seats. Most "real" British sports cars even had wooden steering wheels. In fact many early sports cars of all nations featured wooden steering wheels, which not only looked correct, but felt quite natural when driving. The great Ferrari outsourced its wooden steering wheels from the Italian specialty firm, Nardi. Alfa Romeo made its wooden wheels in house. Most British cars used their own wooden wheel products or those made by the British firm, Moto-Lita.



Rolls Royce

Today, the Nardi and Moto-Lita wooden steering wheel companies are still in business selling their beautiful products to automobile enthusiasts all over the world. Sadly, today's contempory steering wheels contain air bags and in many cases, radio and cruise control buttons. In no way can these vintage steering wheels be fitted on a modern car. It's a shame, because there is a lovely tactile sensation when touching and driving a car with a real wooden steering wheel. It is certainly a lot nicer than the more common leather steering wheels today and worlds apart from the cheap plastic steering wheels found on many, many automotive products. Yuck!

When one really thinks about it, quality in an automobile begins at the steering wheel. That's the major part of a car constantly being touched. Then, the controls and materials in your line of vision are key features. Honda, which has earned an enviable reputation for building quality low priced cars, has always produced controls like signal light stalks and radio buttons with an expensive feel. They seem substantial and click into position with precision. That, my friends, is clever marketing.

I don't know if any of you have noticed, but even the design of a car's keys is becoming an event. This was brought to my attention several years agowhen I sat in on a design press conference with the head of Ford's design department. One hour of the meeting was spent talking about all the research and design that had gone into the design of the key for a newly designed Lincoln. At the time I quietly thought to myself that this is really a silly priority and maybe Ford should put more thought into product dependability. But look at car keys today. They are mini computers. Just don't lose one, replacement of some of the more sophisticated ones can run $150. For the record, I still think this "super key " priority is zany.

So what really is quality? It certainly isn't a car key that looks like a credit card. If you have any semblance of good taste in automobiles and I'll assume you do, because you read me and live in the Hamptons, you'll know quality when you see it. In automobiles, quality can be aesthetic as well as technical. To me quality is as quality does. How long does the vehicle last? How well does it perform? Does the car make design sense? Will it stand the test of time? Is it the kind of car that does more than just please the eye? Does it make you want to peek into the garage at night? Is it practical or wonderfully impractical? Quality does not have to be expensive, but unfortunately it usually is. Go out and find it.

Summer Camps + Adult Fitness

Camp is More Than Just Fun and Games

Most parents view the traditional summer break from school as an extended vacation for their children without the pressures or benefits that organized education provides during the rest of the year. For many parents, the challenge of finding engaging recreational activities for their children to participate in during the summer becomes a full-time job in and of itself. In the end, programs that keep their children active and busy, while imparting specific recreational skills, meet parent expectations for an appropriate and beneficial way for their children to spend the summer.

While the balance of the school year is devoted to academic learning, the summer provides an opportunity for children to improve their recreational skills like swimming, basketball, tennis, golf, dance, theatre and painting. Nonetheless, the summer vacation can and should be a lot more than just a time of fun and recreational skill enhancement. Summer vacation should also provide children with opportunities to hone their social skills and to develop new ways to communicate with each other that will help them in any profession they choose later in life.

While academics are important for a child's success, proficiency in the various social skills is of equal, if not greater import. In today's high-tech world, children's opportunities to interact with each other face-to-face are being replaced by digital communication, yet good interpersonal skills remain the single most important quality an adult needs to have in order to succeed in both business and social endeavors. Children need an organized place where the tools of making and keeping friends are taught and skills children already have are cultivated more than ever before. They need an environment filled with people whose only goal is to improve children's self-esteem, self-confidence and resilience to any adversity that the twists and turns of life may have in store for them.

That's where a traditional summer day or sleep-away camp comes in. At camp, counselors teach children the skills of making and keeping friends in the relaxed arena of a basketball court, swimming pool, fine arts shop or dance studio. At camp, children learn to engage in positive, good-natured competition, while understanding the negative consequences of the cutthroat, competitive play so in vogue in some professional athletics. Camp teaches children how to win with grace and lose with class. In life, they must confront both – at camp, they can experience these situations without the dire consequences of mishandling them in the adult world.

At camp, children are taught to understand the importance of good character and positive values. They learn sportsmanship, tolerance, appreciation, respect, friendship, integrity, sensitivity and helpfulness (at Hampton Country Day Camp, these are known as STARFISH values). Camp teaches children that they are an important part of the lives of everyone around them and that their decisions affect others beside themselves.

Camp provides a supervised, structured and protective environment designed to enhance children's self-esteem, self-confidence and their resilience (their ability to bounce back and continue moving forward even in the face of adversity). While parents have limited capacity to enhance self-esteem and confidence because of the depth of their protective relationship with their children, the mentors and coaches found in a positive camp environment – along with peers and teammates – have an unmatched ability to make a child feel great about his or her achievements and build children's self-confidence and self-esteem.

When considering options for your child for the summer, raise your expectations and demands to include not only days filled with fun and activities that your child will enjoy, but also experiences he or she will learn and benefit from for all the years ahead. That's what a great summer camp experience should provide.

To learn more about what a great summer camp experience can do for your child, visit www.hamptoncountrydaycamp.com, email fun@hamptoncountrydaycamp.com or call 516-953-5171. During the summer season, please call 631-537-1770.

The Right Stuff

Most people find that working out at a gym can help them reach their fitness goals. Why? It's simple. In a gym environment we are more likely to push ourselves to do that extra rep or to keep up in a class or stay on that treadmill a few more minutes. If you are by yourself, the group influence is not there. Plus, there are trainers who can help members improve their form – so costly mistakes and injuries are diminished.

What often drives a person to join a gym is the desire to improve his or her body condition. Most likely either they were told by a doctor they needed to do so – or they looked in the mirror and decided they wanted to fight the laws of gravity that take their toll on all of us. Those emotions that make us self-conscious (because we want to improve) eventually contribute to our need to reach our goal as we begin to see results.

Most of us have had some initial fear about joining a gym. Many find the process overwhelming. You start thinking about beginning a new fitness program – you start noticing advertisements for gyms and other fitness facilities. But you wonder, "Which one is best for me? If I make the commitment to a gym, will I get results? What if I don't use it? Will I fit in?" Gym memberships often involve a commitment for a certain amount of time and money, which causes you to think, "will I get my money's worth?," even though most gyms only cost about two to three dollars per day for membership. Most of these questions will be answered once you establish a workable fitness routine. To ensure a good start, and to overcome some of that initial anxiety, here are a few tips on how to choose a gym that is right for you.

Do your homework. What do you like to do when you exercise? Do you like classes? Is there any equipment you are partial to? Are spa services important to you? Look for a gym that has the right stuff for you.

Check out the gym first. Make sure you visit and take a complete tour at a time when you would normally be working out, so you can see what the crowds are like. Ask about the hours. Even better – ask for a trial membership. Most gyms will let you try working out there at least once prior to joining. If they do charge you to use the gym for a day, ask if they will apply that fee to the membership if you decide to join.

Consider working with a personal trainer. Most gyms have a training staff and can help match you with a trainer. You can use the trainer to help get you started designing a fitness program for you (and then check in on you at periodic intervals) or work with you on a regular basis to help keep you focused and motivated.

Convenience is key. Is the gym near your home or on your way to or from work? If you need to travel more than ten minutes out of your way to get there, you will have a difficult time maintaining your commitment to going to that gym.

Watch your diet. Take a look at what you eat and drink and make sure that you are also addressing the nutritional component of getting in shape. A good trainer can help with this, but if you choose to do it yourself, there are also many good books that can help guide you.

Be patient. Results take some time. Choose workouts that you enjoy and do them for the sheer pleasure AND because you know you that they will help you become a healthier person. As you do this, you will begin to see results and those results will keep you going until you reach your fitness goals.

Exercising and being fit can be a pleasurable and rewarding experience. With warmer weather just around the corner, it's a great time to start a new program. There is no time like the present!

YOUR WEEKLY GUIDE TO FUN IN THE HAMPTONS

Lindsey Buckingham at Westhampton Beach

It's not often that you can get to see of one of Rolling Stone's Top 50 "Essential Albums" of 2006 performed live in the Hamptons. So when the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center announced that Lindsey Buckingham would be performing songs from Under The Skin, on Saturday, March 24, I ordered my tickets right there and then. Though this is only his first solo tour, audience response has been tremendous. Along with his three-piece band, Mr. Buckingham delivers the same caliber of guitar and vocal work that brought him fame and fortune alongside Stevie Nicks as part of one of the greatest folk rock bands of all time, Fleetwood Mac. Embarking on a solo career has been the culmination of Mr. Buckingham's successes as a singer, songwriter and multi-talented musician.

Lindsey Buckingham grew up in the Bay Area of California as the youngest of three boys. All three brothers were competitive swimmers, and Lindsey's brother Greg eventually went on to win a silver medal at the 1968 Olympic Games in Mexico City. Although his brothers pursued swimming throughout their youth, by the age of thirteen Lindsey had discovered folk music and was soon finger-picking guitar by ear and playing with folk groups. However, Lindsey was to meet his musical match a few years later at Menlo Atherton High School, a young girl named Stevie Nicks. With Stevie's sultry, haunting vocals and Lindsey's ability to learn how to play any instrument he picked up, their band, Fritz, became a local success, opening for Janis Joplin, Jimi Hendrix and Carlos Santana. Since finger-picking didn't lend itself to playing rock guitar, Lindsey played the bass for Fritz, perhaps warming up for his most ambitious and well-known role as the bass player for Fleetwood Mac.

In 1972, Lindsey Buckingham and Stevie Nicks formed the group Buckingham Nicks and moved to Los Angeles together to pursue their dream of making music professionally. Although this first attempt did result in a yearlong record deal with Polydor records and critical acclaim, poor sales from their debut album prompted Polydor to drop the duo as quickly as they had signed them. At this time, Mick Fleetwood heard the Buckingham Nicks song "Frozen Love" and decided that Buckingham's guitar and bass were exactly what Fleetwood Mac was missing. On New Years Eve of 1974, Buckingham Nicks and Fleetwood Mac decided to join forces. Their first album was a self-titled affirmation of the two groups' musical chemistry and debuted some of their most-loved songs, "Rhiannon" and "Landslide." By the time their second album, Rumors, was released, the romantic relationship between Lindsey Buckingham and Stevie Nicks was over. At this point, Fleetwood Mac had turned the two into superstars and every detail of their personal lives was at once fodder for the media, stressing their relationship and eventually causing the breakup of the band. Musically, Nicks and Buckingham were still unrivaled in their ability to complement each other and their next album, Tusk, which Buckingham directed, went double platinum despite its avant-garde composition. Although he may have reached his musical pinnacle with Fleetwood Mac's 1987 album, Tango in the Night, playing every instrument on five of the tracks, the pressures of being part of such a monstrously successful band took its toll on him and he decided to leave Fleetwood Mac before Tango in the Night's release.

Because Lindsey had built a solid solo career by recording tracks on the side for films and other artists during his time in Fleetwood Mac, his transition to solo artist was a quick and easy one, and by 1981 he had released his first solo album, Law and Order. Go Insane followed in 1984, and the sudden deaths of his brother, Greg, and his father sparked his third solo effort, Out of The Cradle. This alblum was nominated for a Grammy Award for Best Production, and brought the spotlight on to Lindsey Buckingham as VH-1 decided to follow him on the subsequent tour to film the TV special "Lindsey Buckingham: Behind the Music," which aired in 2001. That same year, executives at Warner Brothers/Reprise records convinced Lindsey to re-record tracks meant for his fourth solo album with Fleetwood Mac. The result, Say You Will, was well-received. This was not the first time Buckingham had come together with his old band-mates – in 1992, President Bill Clinton asked the band to reunite to play at his inaugural ceremony, which then sparked collaboration that led to their record-breaking reunion tour, "The Dance."

Some of the songs from Lindsey's shelved solo effort have been polished and added to his latest album, Under The Skin. Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center audiences will hear these and other tracks the artist has been perfecting over his musical past during the March 24 performance. Reviews have touted Buckingham as a mesmerizing solo performer, and this Westhampton Beach performance will allow fans to get closer to this talented musician than they have ever been before. Far from the stadium-filling, effects-laden music of Fleetwood Mac's recent tours, Under The Skin is an intimate compilation of hushed vocals and intricate guitar melodies that will draw you in and hold your attention until the curtain falls.

Lindsey Buckingham will be performing at the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center on Saturday, March 24 at 8 p.m. For more information, call the box office at (631) 288-1500, visit www.whbpac.org or stop by the 76 Main Street box office in Westhampton Beach.

review: dying city...by gordin & christiano

The Lincoln Center Theater production of Dying City, a new play by Christopher Shinn, directed by James Macdonald, is an engaging 90-minute journey into the troubled souls of three people impacted by the war in Iraq. The little play with much to say was originally produced in London last spring at the Royal Court Theatre and has been beautifully staged here at the Mitzi E. Newhouse theatre.

The story is set in July of 2005, where a young therapist named Kelly (Rebecca Brooksher) is home alone, watching television and packing. We soon learn that her husband died under questionable circumstances while on military duty in Iraq the previous year. There is a loud knock on the door and Peter (Pablo Schreiber) her husband's identical, twin gay brother enters. He has just walked off stage in the middle of a performance of Long Day's Journey into Night because his co-star made an anti-gay remark towards him while onstage. He has been trying to re-establish contact with Kelly ever since his brother's death, but her phone has been disconnected and she has not returned his letters. At first, she behaves as if she didn't know that Peter was in town.

In the middle of the first scene, the actor who plays Peter leaves the room and returns as his bother Craig, Kelly's husband. Schreiber adopts different qualities and wears a different article of clothing as each character. The time shifts to a year earlier, on the night before Craig departs for Fort Bening. As the action evolves, the scenes alternate between 2004 and 2005, between Kelly and Craig and Kelly and Peter. This feels a bit confusing at first, but you do get used to it quickly. With each scene, more is revealed, increasing the emotional stakes. We learn not only of the complexities between Kelly and her brother-in-law Peter, but also of her husband's deeply troubled nature.

James MacDonald helmed the London production, as well as several other plays at the Royal Court Theatre. In New York, he guided a well-received production of Caryl Churchill's A Number at the NY Theater Workshop. His direction of Dying City conveys a seesaw of emotional ups and downs. He has drawn strong, understated performances from the two leads who give a layered nuances to the evening.

Although he has handled the tricky structure of the play skillfully, it still feels like a gimmick every time Mr. Schreiber leaves the set as one brother and returns as the other. Unfortunately, you always see it coming and it feels like a jarring contrivance.

The evening is enhanced by Anthony Ward's understated set, consisting of a bare living room on a raised, revolving platform that turns the Mitzi Newhouse into a real theater in-the-round and places the emphasis completely on the actors. Pat Collins's simple lighting compliments the setting as its starkness highlights the actors emotional lives.

The accumulation of events and revelations, although most interesting, don't add up. You never quite understand what happened or why, but hey, that's life. It may not matter, as long as you get involved and take the ride.

Dying City opened on March 4, 2007 at Lincoln Center's Mitzi E. Newhouse Theater, 150 West 65 Street, and will play a limited run through April 29. Tickets are available at www.telecharge.com, 212-239-6200, www.lct.org, or at the Lincoln Center box office.

preview: the mayor's ball

Gary Ventura and Family

Last week, Gary Ventura, the unofficial "mayor" of the East End beaches, was diagnosed with pancreatic cancer. Gary has no health insurance coverage and needs our help to fight this battle. His passion for beach preservation and surf access has earned him the nickname "The Mayor," and on Wednesday, March 28, a fundraiser will be held in support of Gary, appropriately called The Mayor's Ball. The event will run from 6 p.m.-10 p.m. at Casey's, located on Montauk Highway in Westhampton Beach. Admission is $20 and $15 for those under 21. There will be a 50/50 raffle, surf movies, a slide show, a live performance by reggae rock band Project Vibe. There will also be t-shirts designed by Bedford and printed by Solid Surf Co. for sale.

In the short time since Gary's diagnosis, local vendors have responded with an outpouring of support by donating over $8,000 in prizes for The Mayor's Ball main raffle. For $10 per ticket, entrants will be in the running to win prizes such as a surfboard, kayak, skateboard, Jet Blue gift certificate, surf lessons, a $500 gift certificate to Hildreth's department store, a Don Law wildlife woodcarving and many more awesome items. For $5 per ticket, smaller prizes will be raffled off including dinners at local restaurants and special gift bags. Raffle tickets will be available for pre-sale at local surf shops. All proceeds will benefit Gary and his family.

Known as "GV" to most, Gary moved to the East End from Stony Brook with his wife Alison in the early 1970s. He bought a house in Hampton Bays, started his own business, Oceanside Painting and spent many winters traveling to Tortola, Mexico, Puerto Rico and other tropical destinations to chase waves and pursue his love of surfing. He has also shared his love of surfing with others by giving lessons at the Town of Southampton surf camps. In 1980, Gary was featured in Surfing Magazine and in 2004 Hampton Style magazine listed him as one of the top surfers in the Hamptons.

Over the years, Gary has been an active member of The Surfrider Foundation Eastern Long Island Chapter, a grassroots, non-profit environmental organization that works to protect our oceans, waves and beaches. Gary's efforts have had a positive influence on the politics that surround keeping local surf spots accessible. In 2001, the Army Corps of Engineers proposed a project to rehabilitate the western jetty of Shinnecock Inlet, consequently jeopardizing arguably the best surf break on Long Island known as Three's. Gary alerted the Surfrider Foundation of the proposed plan and was at the forefront of a campaign to protect the break. After many phone calls, letters and meetings, Gary, along with The Surfrider Foundation, got the Army Corps of Engineers attention and they eventually proposed an alternative plan that would reduce the effect on the break.

Gary can be described in many ways. He's an amazing surfer. He is a true activist. He is a world traveler. He has experienced some of the best waves in the world, yet has also remained dedicated to protecting our local beaches. I have found that those who know Gary best describe him as a great guy. They describe him as someone they respect and look up to. He is a man of loyalty and passion. He is a hero. If you don't know Gary personally, please know that his battle with cancer is worth supporting. The Mayor's Ball will be an evening of fun, friends, memories and most importantly, a chance to show appreciation for Gary's devotion to the waves we sometimes take for granted.

– Janine Cheviot

review: breaking legs at quogue community hall

Chris Stavropolis, Edward Kassar, Birgitta Millard, Bob Lingner, David Seiniger.

While most were reveling in an Irish stereotype this past St. Patrick's Day, the audience at the Quogue Community Hall was enjoying an Italian one. The Hampton Theatre Company's current production of Tom Dulack's Breaking Legs, directed by Sarah Hunnewell, centers around a highly characterized "family" of Italians who are in the two businesses that all Italians in film, television, and theater are in – restaurants and the Mob. The out-of-place, awkward, Irish playwright/professor, O'Keefe (Bob Lingner), stumbles into this world in a desperate attempt to find financing for his play. Angie, O'Keefe's former-student-turned-waitress, urges O'Keefe to ask her father and his associates – a collection of non-blood-related "uncles" – to back the play.

This is where the play (Breaking Legs, not O'Keefe's) really picks up some laughs. Halfway through the second act, O'Keefe is torn between agreeing to the revisions the uncles' demand in exchange for their investing a million dollars into the production and preserving its artistic integrity. Here the humor is derived from the absurdity of mobsters arguing over literary structure and box office marketing strategy. O'Keefe listens in horror and disbelief as the uncles propose the addition of musical numbers by their accordion-playing overweight nieces. They even want to change the title to something flashier – "Oklahoma! Now that's a title," argues Uncle Mikey. Although this smacks across the face of O'Keefe's ivory towered sense of playwriting, he must struggle to keep from calling the uncles on their absurdity outright. They are his backers, after all, and he does not want to lose the investment. They are also mobsters, and he does not want to lose his life.

Linger handles the absurd chaos of this scene with skill. He elicits laughs by balancing extreme nervousness with occasional outbursts that arise when the uncles' revisions become too much for his college-cultivated notions of playwriting. The timid O'Keefe turns red with rage, unable to refrain from shouting, when the uncles cross the line and suggest that O'Keefe's characters be dressed as singing cats. Linger himself is probably spared any nervousness or apprehension when it comes to the romantic scenes with Angie, the waitress, as Linder's real-life wife, Birgitta Millard-Linger, plays the role. This familiarity between the actors allows them to create a funny discomfort between the characters. At least O'Keefe is uncomfortable. Angie seems oblivious to or undisturbed by all this, as she bullies him with her affections. The bearded, tweed-wearing professor is no match for the big haired, tight-skirted determined Angie. Ms. Linger demonstrates her character's fortitude with the ongoing gag of pushing up her chest before going after O'Keefe, the way a solider would pump his gun before charging into battle.

The play is scattered with similar physical gags. The mention of any deceased friend or family member (of which there are quite a few) warrants an immediate stop in conversation, during which all Italian characters in the scene cross themselves in unison. Edward Kassar gets his own laughs by endowing his character, Uncle Mikey, with a bizarre, hissing laugh. In the role of Uncle Frankie, James Ewing uses his physicality not to get laughs but to flesh out his character – a hesitant walk, jumpy arms, and twitching shoulders give Ewing's character a developed sense of being and suit Uncle Frankie's apprehension over his delinquent payments nicely.

The actors have room to unleash these highly physical characters in the smart-looking set designed by Ewing and Hunnewell. From the burgundy vinyl booths and the small square paintings of bridges in Venice, right down to the tiny exit sign and dim sconces on the walls, the set captures the feel of the Brooklyn restaurant in which the play is set.

The music played over the darkness during the scene changes and the curtain call could easily be the soundtrack playing in such a restaurant. The audience organically and happily bobbed its collective heads and clapped along to Louis Prima's "Che la Luna" during one scene change. This modifies the theory that everyone is Irish on St. Patrick's Day – this year, everyone was Irish, unless they attended a production of Breaking Legs on that night, in which case, everyone in the audience was also Italian.

review: rock n' renew at the publick house

On Monday night, a motley crew of environmentalists, beer lovers, rock n' roll types and the after-work set came together to support one of the most exciting new charitable endeavors to come along during this "Green Industrial Revolution" – Rock n' Renew. The concept is simple. Downplay the gloom and doom aspects of Global Warming, and give kids a simple, ten-step plan of action that they can complete to reduce their own impact on the environment, as well as the impact of their schools, homes and communities. Each plan is targeted at different age groups, so children as young as five years old can still make a difference.

The unlikely mastermind behind all this is Jonny Dubowski, the lead singer of the popular indie-rock band Jonny Lives! Jonny explains that "If every house in America replaced one light bulb with an energy-saving, compact, fluorescent light bulb, it would be the equivalent of taking one million cars off the road." Unlike some radical environmentalists, Jonny understands how difficult it is to change the way people have been living for 25, 35, 45 or 55 years and convince them to "go green." But if teachers and role models can make living sustainably seem as "second-nature as breathing, or brushing your teeth every morning" to kids, then there is a chance that America will reach its goal of reducing CO2 emissions by 70%, back to the same level as in 1992, by the year 2050.

Although Rock n' Renew has only been in existence since July of 2006, actors and musicians from all corners of the entertainment industry have rallied behind the singer to support his message that changing the way children use energy in their day to day lives is the key to saving them from suffocating on their own CO2 emissions in the future. Debbie Harry from Blondie has pledged her support to Rock n' Renew, along with actors Leonardo DiCaprio, Kaal Pen from Harold and Kumar go to White Castle and Van Wilder and musicians from bands like The Strokes, The Kaiser Chiefs, Fountains of Wayne, Everclear, Morningwood and other stars that children look up to. Many of these supporters will all be on hand at Rock n' Renew's Earth Day celebration on April 21 in New York City to help celebrate the achievements of children from schools who have completed the three-phase Rock n' Renew curriculum, and the winners of the Rock n' Renew student film contest, which aims to capture the student film that shows the most energy-saving solutions.

Jonny Dubowski and Environmentalists in the Making

Ten schools from across the country have already completed the three-part Rock n' Renew curriculum, which was devised by The Northeastern Energy Alliance, The National Clean Cities Program and Jonny Dubowski. More than 40 others are in the midst of the curriculum. Each grade is presented with an age-appropriate curriculum to follow. Due to the fact that Jonny Lives! is constantly touring the country, Jonny is able to speak at schools while on tour, then check up on their progress each time his band passes through that town or city while on tour. Art, Science, Math and Creative Writing teachers are given projects to complete with the children, and older students are given assignments to spread the message of renewable energy and energy conservation through their school newspaper and other local media. Jonny has actually visited schools for a second time, noting how they could still improve. On a third visit, Jonny realizes that his advice had been put into practice. He explained how he visited the school for a second time and saw too many cars in the parking lot. He then told the kids, "some of you must pass each other on the way to school. Why don't you carpool?" When Jonny came back for his third visit, there were fewer cars in the parking lot and just as many kids at the school. They had actually listened to his advice!

Jonny believes that "the youngest kids are the most passionate and want to help the most." At his shows, he sets up a table where he can talk to kids after the concert and teach them about how to use sustainable energy sources and how they can get in touch with him so he can come to their schools and help them "go green." Rock n' Renew is also in the process of linking teachers from countries around the world with their local environmental organizations and setting them up with the tools necessary to complete the three-part curriculum. Through all of his endeavors with Rock n' Renew, Jonny tries to empower children and let them know that their actions and opinions matter – and that the world is listening.

Dave Evans' MINI – MOVIE REVIEWS

TMNT

Given the strength of the eighties revival in music and fashion, it was perhaps inevitable that the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles would be given the revamp treatment. Here the amphibians are given a darker makeover (a la Batman Begins) to stylish, action-filled effect.

Reign Over Me

In a conversion that must have Jim Carrey green with envy, Adam Sandler puts in a strong performance in a serious role. Playing a man whose family dies on 9/11, Sandler convincingly works through a wide range of emotions, never allowing things to tip over into sentimentality.

The Hills Have Eyes II

Finally the hoardes of people who have been crying out for a sub-par sequel to last year's sub-par original can sleep easily. The crazed rural inhabitants of the desert continue to raise merry hell for a selection of attractive but talentless young fodder.

The Shooter

Wesley Snipes' continuing career is a mystery to many and this turgid thriller will go no way towards solving it. Here he plays an ex-CIA agent drafted in to take out a terrorist who discovers that someone higher up is manipulating his every move. Tedious.

Pride

Troubled teens are a favorite staple of cheap 'feel-good' cinema, each film needing only a new sport or environment in which to play out their trite redemption stories. Here it's swimming and Bernie Mac is involved. Enough said, perhaps.

300

This film adaptation of a comic book about the Battle of Thermopylae might seem like a hard sell but this really is smart and spectacular, fantasy filmmaking. Obviously there's kind of a lot of violence on show here, but it is so perfectly choreographed and executed that there are moments when one forgets that what is actually happening is something horrifying rather than beautiful. Mesmerizing, but not for the faint-hearted.

Zodiac

It's been five years since the uninspiring Panic Room and director David Fincher is trying hard to regain some street credit with this film that is based-on-a-true-story of the Zodiac killings in 1970s San Francisco. It's a strong, dark film, aided by an excellent cast (Mark Ruffalo, Brian Cox, Robert Downey Jr. and the fantastic Jake Gyllenhaal), which should place him firmly back on top.

The Number 23

Jim Carrey takes another swipe at serious acting in this thriller about a man who finds a book which seems to be based on his life but ends with a dreadful murder. Carrey isn't bad as the frazzled hero but even without the laughs, his rubber face is hard to take all that seriously. Joel Schumacher directs in his usual manner: commercial, schlocky but often entertaining.

Black Snake Moan

Fresh from the success of Hustle and Flow, director Craig Brewer returns with this tale of an abused young girl who finds help and guidance from Samuel L. Jackson's retired bluesman. There's something unpleasantly racist about the assumption that blackness is in and of itself spiritually healing and while Christina Ricci's central performance is strong, her character never quite feels complete.

Miss Potter

Renee Zellweger has few charms but one thing she certainly does have is a great English accent. That's about all that keeps her afloat in this twee-biopic of children's writer, Beatrix Potter, and while the flights of fancy with animated animals are sometimes diverting, the central love story (between Zellweger and the ever-lovely Ewan McGregor) never really ignites sufficiently.

Breach

Espionage and excitement in the Cold War is not a hard thing to imagine but this adaptation of a true story captures the pitch and tension perfectly. The excellently creepy Chris Cooper puts in a fine performance as the traitorous Robert Hanssen and Ryan Philippe has just the right look for newbie Eric O'Neill. Slick, dark thrills abound.

Reno 911!: Miami

Why those in charge of Comedy Central saw fit to bring this mediocre cop comedy to the big screen is anyone's guess. That's not to say there aren't funny moments and that fans of the show won't enjoy this immensely but there's nothing new that comes from transplanting the bumbling constabularies to Florida. Fans only.

Black Snake Moan & The Most

Watch out! Movies are Hazardous Materials. Reviewers especially find many too hot to handle. Volatile or not, every movie gets to at least one audience member in some way or another. Even then, it is easy to misinterpret the moviemaker's intent, just as a dear reader might not know where the reviewer is coming from. Two recent films that are both critics' HazMats are Black Snake Moan and The Host. These are the kind of movies I review wearing a lead-lined, yellow rubber suit and hood with insulated goggles to allow me to review bravely. Sensible folks will initially be appalled at my recommending a trashy exploitation film that oozes sleazoid, black-white race stereotypes like Black Snake Moan. Most would consider a movie having an oversexed white girl chained in the home of a blues playing black man a horror movie. I ask you to think again. Then there's an actual horror movie, of the "Creature that Will Devour Anything in Sight" variety, whose heroine is a thirteen-year-old moppet, known as The Host. Let me explain.

Audacious is the word for Black Snake Moan. We could not expect less from Craig Brewer, who also wrote and directed Hustle & Flow, a film glowing with a flow of passionate pimps, pink prostitutes and day and night nymphomaniacs out of the 1950s – titillating, pulp paperback, white trash S&M fantasies. With Black Snake Moan, he just about achieves his goal of busting the old Southern cornpone-porn genre by adding musical hymns to the American Way and comedy that bumps the Amos 'n Andy humor up to the wrath of lusty and lurid, bare-chested glory. Mr. Brewer burst forth from Sundance where his Hustle & Flow won the Audience award. Paramount then bought if for $ 9.5 million. At that time, a panel of Southern filmmakers was asked how they avoided Southern stereotypes. Brewer and others didn't necessarily want to give up the raw material. Rather, they wanted to turn them upside down and inside out and goose them to new meaning. Brewer does that with the givens of the ol' South, just as he utilizes the blues of his hometown Memphis. The film's title, Black Snake Moan, is taken from a song by Blind Lemon Jefferson – the kind of music that snaked up from the hellish steam heat of the Delta like a paddleboat brought north by the Devil.

The opening scenes announce a down and dirty view of the South rarely seen and felt vividly. Rae, played by big-time star Christina Ricci, and her boyfriend, Ronnie, are shaking up a trailer with earth-moving sex. He's leaving for boot camp and neither can handle the parting. He becomes violently sick and she goes off on a wild, drinking, druggy sex rampage, which leaves her a rumpled mess by the side of the road. The incomparable Samuel L. Jackson, as Lazarus the biblically inspired farmer, finds her and carries her home to heal her. His internal, fire and brimstone rage is tamped down to atone for the lascivious Christian beliefs boiling within. Having found out about Rae's insatiable cravings, he shackles her to a radiator with a forty-pound chain. It's true that Mr. Brewer forces theatrical metaphors but, being extracted from Southern history, he also creates a new myth. Black Snake Moan is a very serious balance of pulp rascality and high-pitched, wicked Southern murk.

Black Snake Moan uncoils like a rattlesnake, with frightening heights of toxic venom against a lovingly pictured American South of yellow-green bean fields and unforgettable images backed by some of the best music you'll hear in any film this year. Redemption will not come easily to Rae or Lazarus, but the filmmaker does relent in its final act as he heals open wounds and applies a soothing balm of tenderness. Proactive fans will find this a letdown. However, they cannot contain this forcefully creative director as he is revealing new vistas of cinema.

The Host, a re-spun monster thriller from Korean director Bong Joon-ho, resurfaces a toxic waste-fed reptilian fright with an uncanny, fresh flair. Like Fred Astaire reinventing an old dance routine, Joon-ho taps out a dazzling array of directorial acuity. From its opening attack scene, comparisons will be made to Spielberg's direction but (and it's a big but) Mr. Bong's terror does not guarantee a happy ending, even though the defenders are a family akin to Little Miss Sunshine's. It's one of the ugliest films of its kind and the most wonderful. It's acclaim at the New York and Cannes festivals underline the strong messages it conveys of U.S. world-bullying and environmental negligence. See it before the film gets cleaned up.

Guy Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at Major Film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmy's and various film festivals. Sarah Halsey assists him.

Dining in the Hamptons

Oasis Waterfront Restaurant and Bar

3253 Noyac Road
Sag Harbor, NY
631-725-7110

An oasis is best defined as something that provides refuge, relief and a pleasant contrast to the outside world. Well, Oasis Waterfront Restaurant and Bar in Sag Harbor certainly lives up to its name and perhaps redefines the entire meaning by producing an atmosphere that exceeds expectations. This week I had the opportunity to dine at the Oasis Waterfront Restaurant and Bar with my friend David, and we really enjoyed the delightful atmosphere, first-class service and adventurous food.

When you walk into Oasis, the first thing you will notice is the décor. The candlelit tables have beautiful white linen tablecloths and comforting wicker seats that allow you to sit down, relax and slip away into the surroundings. There are also tables that allow you and your dining entourage to sit on cushioned benches against the wall. Exotic, fresh flower arrangements are scattered throughout the restaurant and their vibrant, tropical reds, oranges and yellows compliment the mostly white furnishings. Soothing, ambient music played and set a calming tone for the evening.

Lou Dollinger is the co-owner of the restaurant and he operates the business with his brother-in-law, head chef John Donnelly. This is their sixth year in the Sag Harbor location. Dollinger showed us to our table and highlighted their specialty cocktails of the night. Recommended was the Blackberry Cosmo, which consisted of Absolute Citron, Cointreau, fresh lime, cranberry juice and blackberry puree. The drink was garnished with large, fresh blackberries and lime and was an enjoyable party in my mouth. David ordered a glass of Sangria, which is typically made with red wine, fresh, seasonal fruit and a bit of bubbly water or citrus flavored soda. The Oasis Sangria was made with ample fruit that enhanced the flavor of the drink and livened his sprits.

Our server, Marcia Claire, was courteous and helpful. She listed the specials, and although each dish sounded more appealing than the last, I knew that I had to try the mini tuna tartare tacos for my first course. The presentation was enticing and simple, with fragrant bits of mango centered in the dish. Red onion, avocado and lime vinaigrette was drizzled generously across the tacos. Oasis, with a modern American menu that emphasizes seafood, certainly knows their tuna. This was fresh, firm and delicious to the last bite. David chose the warm, walnut crusted brie with Frisée salad, with dried cranberries, apples and a port wine reduction. The combination of flavors in this dish captured all his senses and left him wanting more.

After the first course, we both enjoyed the spinach salad with warm bacon vinaigrette, fried shallots and gorgonzola cheese. Sometimes when you dine, restaurant dishes have perfect presentation and no taste, or are just the opposite, a factual tasty mess. Yet true culinary skill is born when both aspects of a dish are successful, and Oasis does just that with eagle-eye precision.

The service continued to be smooth and sweet as we perused their wide selection of wines. Marcia recommended we try Paringa, a South Australian Cabernet. Smooth, rich with a barely noticeable hint of spice, this was just the drink to help compliment my next dish: chili rubbed ribeye, grilled asparagus and spicy frites with aoli. I would recommend this dish to anyone who enjoys a steak that is cut well, tender and literally melts in your mouth, and someone who can also stand some zing in their cuisine. For his entrée, David chose the grilled spicy shrimp with Asian peanut pesto, snow pea shoot salad and mango-ginger vinaigrette. Inspired by Thai flavors, this seafood dish was expressive, exotic and fulfilling.

As if this weren't enough, we were gently coaxed into trying dessert and the choices were well beyond average. We sampled the flourless chocolate cake with a mini milkshake and tried a selection of gelato in cinnamon, vanilla and chocolate. The very core of the flourless chocolate cake erupted syrupy chocolate, like some heaven-sent, volcanic surprise. The mini milkshake was cute and a nice, classy touch to the dish. The Espresso martini, layered with Starbucks coffee liquor, Bailey's Irish cream, Stoli vanilla vodka and shot of espresso, was the recommended dessert drink. For every coffee lover across the East End, this is a signature drink designed to waken and kindle even the mellowest spirits.

Around us, diners enjoyed conversation and fare while looking out of the large bay windows that serve to open the main dining area past the Mill Creek Marina and Noyac Harbor, underscoring the feeling of the special experience. You can get to the Oasis Waterfront Restaurant and Bar by land or by sea. Whatever route you do chose, just get there. You will be happy you did.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

I'm having a dinner party. The challenge is that I'm not in my bright, spacious country kitchen at home on the East End, with a 5', square marble Island, professional 6-burner range, stainless steel appliances and more than enough equipment to satisfy any professional chef. I'm in south Miami Beach, where my husband and I are enjoying a bit of a winter retreat. Yes I know, lucky too, to beat some very harsh winter weather.

While the basics are all here including a stove, fridge, dishwasher, the limitations of T-fal cookware, no roasting pan or cookie sheet in sight and of course no Cuisinart. But there is a blender, a terrific electric juicer and surprisingly good knives and even a cutting board – I'm all set.

I found a broiler pan in the bottom oven draw, the base of which can double as a baking pan and chose a broiled salmon recipe on a bed of leek julienne – I love leek. Salmon steaks are seasoned with a savory mix of salt, pepper, fresh thyme and white wine and a fine compliment is the simple and classic roasted new potatoes with rosemary. I can surely whip up a buttery lemon curd to serve in wine glasses topped with crushed Graham crackers and fresh strawberries for a luscious dessert. I think my guests will be pleased.

BROILED SALMON STEAKS WITH JULIENNE OF LEEK

When broiling fish, use a non-stick baking pan or brush a conventional pan with oil and broil on one side only.

Serves 6

3 leeks, trimmed and rinsed clean
2 tablespoon vegetable or canola oil
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
6 salmon steaks, 1 - 1 1/4-inch thick
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
2 tablespoons of fresh thyme leaves
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
2/3 cup dry white wine or 1/3 cup dry vermouth

1. Leeks can harbor lots of sand between the layers; be sure to trim and clean them very well. Hold on to the core end and cut leeks lengthwise into quarters. Soak leeks in fresh water for about 15 minutes to rid excess sand. Drain leeks and dry well on paper towels.

2. Heat vegetable oil and butter in a large non-stick skillet. When butter melts and foam subsides, put in the leek and saute for about 10-12 minutes over very low heat, toss occasionally until lightly golden and crisp. Keep warm.

3. Meanwhile, season steaks with oil, thyme sprigs and salt and pepper. Pat the seasonings down gently. Can be done ahead.

4. Preheat broiler to highest setting. Place the steaks on a lightly greased baking pan. Pour wine around the salmon and broil about 4-inches from the source of heat for about 8 minutes until tender and springy to the touch. Serve on a bed of warm leek.

ROAST NEW POTATOES WITH GARLIC AND ROSEMARY

Par boil the smallest new potatoes you can find then roast until crusty on the outside and tender within.

Serves 6-8

2 1/2 pounds small new potatoes
Coarse (kosher) salt
1/4 cup extra-virgin olive oil
3-4 large cloves garlic, peeled and thinly sliced
2 heaping tablespoons chopped fresh rosemary
Freshly ground pepper

1. Scrub unpeeled potatoes and place in a large saucepan with cold water to cover. Bring to a boil over high heat and season the water with 1 tablespoon coarse salt. Adjust heat and simmer briskly for 10 minutes.

2. Drain the potatoes and transfer to a shallow terra cotta or Pyrex baking dish. Drizzle olive oil over potatoes and turn carefully to coat. Sprinkle over garlic slices and chopped rosemary. Generously sprinkle with coarse salt and freshly ground pepper to taste. Can be prepared up to several hours ahead. Preheat oven to 400 degrees

3. Place baking dish, containing potatoes, in preheated oven and roast for 35-40 minutes until crusty outside and tender within. Serve hot.

LEMON CURD PARFAIT

Place creamy lemon curd in a martini or wine glass, top with crushed Graham cracker crumbs and top with fresh berries.

Serves 6

For the lemon curd
6 tablespoons unsalted butter
Grated rind of 1 lemon
Pinch salt
4 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
2/3 cup sugar
4 eggs
1 egg yolks

To finish

Crushed Graham cracker crumbs
Fresh berries

1. Melt butter in a small saucepan. Add rind, salt, lemon juice and sugar. Stir to mix.

2. In a mixing bowl, whisk the yolks and whites together until combined. Gradually pour into the lemon mixture whisking vigorously over very low heat. Then, with a wooden spoon, stir the mixture constantly until thick and the curd coats the spoon for about 6-7 minutes.

3. Prepare lemon curd up to a week ahead and refrigerate in a suitable container. When ready to serve spoon into serving glass, sprinkle over graham cracker crumbs and top with fresh berries of your choice.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

SURPRISING PLACES: Gallery Merz
Part III

Sag Harbor's Gallery Merz has continued to maintain its reputation for unusual, quirky art. Thus, it certainly qualifies as a "Surprising Place." That's not to suggest that the gallery features work that comes and goes with the seasons. It does suggest that idiosyncratic artists are welcome here, like Charles Waller and David Suter in particular, in addition to more traditional artists. Simply put, there's room for both conceptual and conventional styles here. We'd like to see even more conceptual, over-the-edge pieces in the future, too.

Let's start with the "edgy" works, which are always a delight and a challenge to interpret. Mr. Waller, Mr. Suter, and newcomer Keith Long have a penchant for materials, texture, found objects and, often, multi-dimensional perspectives. These themes can be seen in Mr. Suter's mirrors and diverse styles, such as primitivism and Cubism.

Work by James Dela-Volpe

The found objects in Mr. Waller's "Pirate Whale," like the bone and lock, contribute not only "attitude" to this whimsical piece, but the idea of assemblage as well. Moreover, the artists prove that art and craft can co-exist and that craftsmanship and content are equally important. It is also interesting that these quirky pieces are folk art.

A good example of this last idea is Mr. Long's wood hangers made from mahogany furniture pieces. They simultaneously function as hangers and beautiful sculptural forms. Regarding sculpture, Mr. Suter's three-dimensional shapes have a true "attitude" and each figure assumes a character of its own, including the standing owl, which assumes humanlike traits.

There are more conventional works in the show, such as Ruth Nasa's movie poster that highlights stars like Kate Hudson and attempts to bridge the gap between pop culture and art. Tom Lulevitch's figures, painted in a cross-form, also recall pop culture images, depicted upside-down in a non-conventional way.

Then there are works by James Dela-Volpe and Jane Johnson, which represent different degrees of abstraction. Mr. Dela- Volpe's paintings are geometric and colorful; Ms. Johnson's work is more impressionistic and dreamlike. While Ms. Johnson's work shows little of the hard-edged quality demonstrated by other artists' paintings, such muted ways of depicting nature have become just as important to artistic vision.

The current show will be on view at the Gallery Merz until April 20.

HONORING THE ARTIST: DANIEL POLLERA

If ever there was anyone who believed in the power of positive thinking, it's this week's cover artist, Daniel Pollera. Not only are his artworks indicative of this philosophy (we dare you not to smile after looking at the cover painting), his daily interactions with friends, business associates and his family in particular also convey that message.

Not only do family members make Mr. Pollera's world go 'round, they also play an active part in his life, as the following conversation shows.

Q: I know your family is very close, but there was a time when you were not happy working in the family business. So you left after 20 years. I assume you found your calling in creating art.

A: Yes. I will be doing this until the day I die. I'm addicted to it. I couldn't stop painting if I wanted to.

Q: I know you get your inspiration from local scenes, images you put together and from experiences you have when you take your boat (and dog) out on the water. But your latest piece comes from someplace different.

A: I dreamt that I saw a boat in the dune grass. It appeared like a raw, tender old wooden dingy against the dark blue sky. It was so pristine and real to me. I made calls to find someone who had a dingy; I finally found someone in Sayville. You know, Paul McCartney got the idea for his song, "Yesterday," from a dream.

Q: Objects, like the chairs on the beach or on a porch, play a big part in your paintings. I think the boat you dreamt about, which you call a "pram" or baby boat, is very much like your chairs.

A: Yes, I see that. They both represent a comfort zone where we can feel secure.

Q: The objects' shapes also surround a person. But there are other feelings the viewer gets from your paintings, too.

A: Yes. I got an e-mail from a woman in Tennessee who thanked me for bringing the beach to her. I love to get messages like that. I want to recreate what I'm experiencing, like when I'm by myself on the boat. My favorite time of day is the afternoon, around 2 p.m. There's a sense of intimacy. I'm listening to the wind blowing, watching the sun; I'm in heaven.

Q: During this conversation, I couldn't help but notice that you took three personal calls. One call was from your sister, Melissa, another from your wife, Nancy, and the last call was from your mother. They are never far from you, literally or figuratively. That's a good thing.

A: I have a daughter, Valerie, who is at college in Pennsylvania and is hoping to get an internship in Washington, D.C. My son, Danny, lives at home and is going to school for civil engineering. My mother, who has not been well, lives with us and we take care of her.

Q: Does your family get involved in your painting at all?

A: My wife gives me suggestions. She'll say, "Those clouds bother me." A lot of times she's right.

Q: If you could have changed anything in your life, what would it be?

A: Nothing. Like I said, I'm in heaven.

– Marion Wolberg Weiss

Things That Go Bump in the Night

For the last couple of years there have been too many females sleeping in my queen-sized bed. It's playing havoc with my relationship. I've had terribly fitful sleep and disturbed nights, making me grumpy and unpleasant to sleep with. I've been begging my husband for a king-sized bed ever since the arrival of Piper the pup, who sleeps in the cutest ball between the two of us. Unfortunately, my hubby and I are at odds about the importance of this rather expensive purchase. When we first got Piper, we tried to make her sleep on the floor next to our bed, but her persistence and our lack of dedication to the concept, especially when Piper gives us "that" look, using her big brown eyes to full advantage was unsuccessful. Before we knew what had happened, there are now three bodies sleeping on our QUEEN-sized bed. Or are there more?

My husband sleeps like a log, Piper like a dog and I dream, (when I remain asleep long enough), of a bigger bed. Then I saw a "Ray" of hope, in an episode of Rachel Ray (yes, I'm confessing, I occasionally watch). I became hooked by one particular segment, after hearing the promotional tag line which went something like, "Tune in to find out why you MUST change your bed every five years." Hmm… Our bed is practically an antique, at the ripe age of eight. I turned up the volume and settled in, but as I watched on, I became even more certain that I needed a new bed and beyond that, was completely grossed out!

It turns out that not only are there three of us in bed every night, there are in fact thousands sleeping in our extraordinarily over-crowded bed! Ray was featuring advice from housekeeping guru and author of The Accidental Housewife, Julie Edelman.

The following is taken from the transcripts of the show, which aired January 22, 2007.

Begin transcript: "Dust mites feed on dead skin cells, which means your hair, skin, even dandruff are meals for these microscopic pests. "In one bed, over a course of time, you can have 100,000 to 10 million of these dust mites," explains Julie. "One single dust mite will produce 20 droppings. Do the math." Allergies are caused by these droppings, not the mites themselves. To help cut down on allergy symptoms and the mites themselves — because you can't really get rid of all of them — wash your sheets regularly (every two weeks) in really, really hot water, and try a dust mite mattress covers or fitted sheet. Julie also recommends vacuuming the bed and changing the vacuum bag because mites can live in there. Even so, she suggests getting a new mattress every five to seven years." End transcript.

I didn't know whether to be excited that I had a good excuse for a new bed, or just so grossed out that I'd sleep on the floor until we got a new one.

Buying a mattress every five years is no small feat. But it's nothing compared to the thousands of creepy crawly feet that are running around your mattress. Oh, and according to Edelman, pillows should be replaced every three years. I thought that Peter (my hubby) would definitely concede. But instead, much to my chagrin, he simply ordered a dust mite mattress cover! (If anyone wants to start a petition, they can e-mail me at samaltea@cs.com.)

We've all heard the saying, don't let the bed bugs bite…but until recently this has been a funny, almost non-sensical saying. Bed bugs, which are about 1/4 of an inch in length, have no wings and are an oval, shaped pest. Pesticides nearly wiped out their species in the 1950s, but bed bugs are back with a vengeance, even making headlines around the country. Only days ago I saw a news segment featuring the pesky little blighters who had infested a cruise ship leaving it's passengers with sore itchy red lesions. Bed bugs don't carry disease and so they're not particularly dangerous. Although they do suck on your blood while you're sleeping and the lesions they leave behind can really bug you.

Naked to the human eye, bed bugs can appear as nearly white, light tan, or deep brown/burnt orange in color. So, if you see something akin to this in your bed, lesions on the skin similar to a mosquito bite, or, even more disgusting, tiny spots of blood (fecal spots) you might want to call your pest control specialist. But don't panic, even though they are making a comeback, bug beds are still relatively rare.

Sweet dreams!

Let the Bikini Countdown Begin

Have you over-indulged during the winter months? Does the thought of being seen in your bathing suit send shivers down your spine? Many of us tend to slack off in the winter – we forfeit watching our diets to treat ourselves with holiday cookies and candies, and we don't exercise as often as we should. Now it's time to get with it, because summer is just around the corner. To help you, here are a few key things to know about getting your body back into bikini shape in the next three months.

Rather than going on a diet, try to make a lifestyle change. By making a permanent change, it will be easier to continue eating better well into the future. One of the most important things to do while you are watching what you eat is to keep a food journal. Before you begin your lifestyle change, write down everything you normally eat during a day to get a sense of what you need to alter. The best way to lose weight is by eating lots of protein, to help build lean muscle, and lots of fiber, to help clean out your system. Three sensible meals per day, one or two sensible snacks and lots of water will get your body on the right track to looking great in a bikini this summer.

It is also important to set a goal for yourself in terms of how much weight you would like to lose during a specified amount of time. Again, before you begin your new regimen, record all of your body measurements and weight. Measurements are a better way of keeping track of your progress, as weight comes off quicker in the beginning, due to your body losing a lot of water. By retaking your measurements every two weeks and comparing your results, it is easy to see how close you are to your goal. If you don't know the specific areas of your body to measure, you can consult a personal trainer at a health club and they can do it for you.

In order to get a bikini body by summer, it is imperative that you walk through those health club doors or put your running shoes on and get moving. At least one hour of exercise should be done at least five or six times per week to reach your goal by June. No matter what shape and size you are, all bodies look better when they are lean and toned. Along with eating right, exercising will help you get the look you want.

Cardio is one of the three main components in exercise. It should last between thirty and sixty minutes per workout session – the longer and more intense the cardio, the more calories you will burn. Weight training, the second main component of exercise, is just as essential as the first. It is important to spend just as much time and effort lifting weights and toning your muscles as you do practicing cardio exercises. If lifting weights is a new thing for you, some guidance is necessary. You can consult a personal trainer at a health club or take a conditioning class – either one of these will give you the help you need to achieve your goal. The third main component of effective exercise is stretching. Stretching out your muscles before and after each workout is imperative to preventing injury. Stretch for at least five minutes at the beginning and end of every workout.

If you have been exercising regularly without getting any results, it may be time to change your routine. When the body does the same exercises again and again, at some point it becomes resistant to them and those same exercises that helped you achieve a lean physique last summer will not have the same effect as they did when you first started working out. If you are a power walker, try running for a minute or two every quarter mile. If you climb the Stairmaster day in and day out, get on the Elliptical or try taking a Step or Spin class.

Memorial Day weekend will be here before you know it, and then the summer will have officially begun. By eating right, exercising daily and keeping track of your progress in a notebook, you will find yourself wearing a bikini confidently by the time you set foot on the beach. So what are you waiting for? Get up off the couch, and get to it!

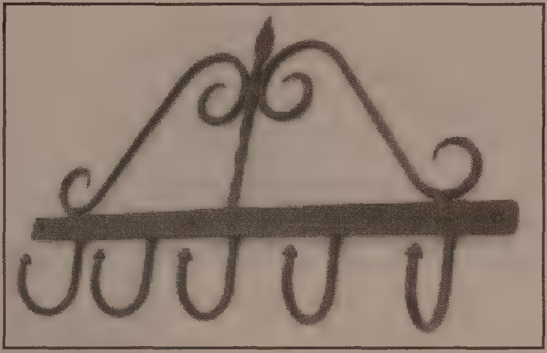
Dan's HOME

Size Matters

Size does matter. When moving from a home to an apartment, you are forced to deal with the fact that you are losing floor space. Organization is the key to establishing a spot for everything.

You can probably get everything you need to organize your new apartment from a big box department store or home store. In one trip to Riverhead in the Escalade you can visit them all, but who wants their apartment to look just like it just came out of a Pottery Barn catalogue? There are more interesting ways to establish space, without buying out (or "selling out") a giant retailer.

Apartments are notorious for lacking windows. A great fad in recent years has been to reuse old windows as mirrors and decorative pieces in the home. If you have an old window from your house it isn't that difficult to transform the window to a mirror. You can place a mirror behind the window frame then attach it with metal brackets. The nice thing about these mirrors is that the window gives the illusion of an actual window and the mirror gives the illusion of depth. To make the window mirror more efficient, add a bookshelf to it. Wooden bookshelf kits are available at craft stores such as Michaels. The kits are inexpensive and have all you need to create a bookshelf out of that old window. It's really just three pieces: a flat plank of wood and two supports. Depending on how ornamental you are looking to get, you can use brass or wrought iron supports. If you are going to stain the wood, avoid getting any stain on the metal supports, or if you choose to use entirely wood, you can paint or stain everything once it is all together.



A benefit of many apartments is that they have higher ceilings than you may be used to – so what you lose in floor space you can make up for in wall space. By using bricks and mahogany planks you can build floor-to-ceiling shelving units which offer an "exposed brick" feel as well as a lot of storage space. You must remember that this is a very heavy shelf system so check to make sure the floors are level and will support it. If not, the bricks will lean to the downward sloping side.

You can purchase the mahogany at most lumber yards. For the wood, ask them to cut at the desired lengths. Mix a little cement mortar in a plastic bucket and stack the bricks, starting with a solid base. Make two "towers" of brick, and place the wood at the desired heights to bridge the towers. Stack more bricks, repeating the process as needed. The unit is a bit permanent, but then again, this is your home, you will need something to make it feel permanent.

Hooks can be your best friend. I cannot stress it enough, use the wall space. If you have a dinner table and it has four chairs, but you almost never use more than two (except for company) sink large, STRONG hooks into the walls and hang the chairs so the seats are at almost eye level or higher. If you want, you can even use the chairs as shelves to display photos or to hold books. A great look is to use the chairs to store your dishware. The vertical nature of the chair and the stack of plates play off each other quite well, just make sure the colors work.

Put small hooks under bookshelves, on the backs of doors and throughout the kitchen to hang odds and ends. Finding cabinet space for pots and pans is very difficult, so look into a hanging pot rack. They run about $150 and can be installed rather easily. Just make sure it is high enough that you don't hit your head.

When it comes to clothes, you almost never have enough space. Those bulky sweaters tend to take up all the room, but they don't have to. Storage products like Space Bag, which allows you to fill plastic bags then vacuum them flat, help save dramatic amounts of space. They are ideal for seasonal items, bulky jackets, snow pants. etc. Just fold the clothes, place them in the bag, seal it, and suck it flat.

While all these ideas are great to save space, the real secret in moving from a house to an apartment is to sell everything that you don't need. It clears out the clutter, puts some cash in your pocket and gives you a clean slate to start the next phase of your life.

The Garden At Rock Cottage

by Lance Brilliantine

Beautiful Gardens from Seed

While it is easier to buy seedlings than grow plants from seeds, nature provides all that is needed to grow plants successfully from seed. Yet, many gardeners are disappointed with trying seeds because they over care for them, or miss out on an essential ingredient.

Over the years, we have found it worthwhile to start some seeds by waiting until the weather has warmed and planting many directly in the garden. Others benefit from an indoor or greenhouse start if they take a long time to grow and bloom.

There is no rule on where to start seeds and I am not really sure of the reasons and benefits that go into determining what to start indoors. Mostly, I have learned from trial and error and know which seeds I have luck with. For example, I never start impatiens from seeds because it is easier to buy them from a nursery. Similarly, I never start petunias from seed (they are too difficult). However, I always start zinnias directly in the garden (they grow so quickly and are highly successful this way). I do start hollyhocks, delphiniums, Echinacea, and marigolds indoors. They benefit from the jump-start and we get stronger plants and larger blooms as a result. Every gardener probably has his/her own preferences.

A general rule of thumb for starting seeds is six -to-eight weeks before the last frost date. Seed packets generally give an indication of indoor planting times and experimentation will help you fine tune timing. And you will find the essentials of good germination are quality seeds, soil, water and temperature.

Concerning seeds, buy seeds annually. Old seeds tend to provide marginal germination and results. You can test seed viability if you have time by counting and planting a few and then tracking the number that germinate. The resulting percentage is the expected germination rate.

Purchase sterilized seed-starting mixtures. These tend to be lighter in weight and have the nutrients needed. Experienced growers often create their own mixtures or amend store bought soil. Regardless of approach, make sure the medium is sterilized to avoid problems with molds and funguses - that just love to each new seedling.

Select growing containers of the right size. If too small, seedlings outgrow them quickly. Root bound seedlings do not provide maximum growth. We prefer making paper pots from newspapers that allow adequate space and also provide a safe environment (newspaper ink is slightly antibiotic). It later facilitates transfer of seedlings to the garden and reduces transfer shock (the paper disintegrates over the summer).

Fill containers with the seed-starting mix and water thoroughly. Make sure the soil is wet, but not soaking. Plant the seeds less deep than recommended on seed packets. Add a little more soil on top and water again.

Keep the soil moist, but not soaked and if at all possible, place the seeds where they will receive temperatures of about 70-80 degrees F, which seems the best range for most seeds. Seeds will germinate outside of their ideal range, but the further away from the ideal range for the particular seed, the lower the germination rate.

The time required to germinate seeds can be from a few days to several weeks. Germination times vary widely. Seed packets often indicate general germination time, but don't be surprised if it takes longer. For annuals that do not have fragrance on their own, soaking the seeds overnight in rose or orange water before planting adds the fragrance to the seeds and to the flowers when they bloom.

Fungus problems are fairly common with seeds grown indoors. You can use a product called "Captan" to protect against mold and fungus growth, or buy pre-treated seeds, if available. Water seedlings in the morning only and from the bottom if possible to help avoid mold and fungal problems.

As soon as seedlings emerge, place them in a location where they will get direct light. Placing seedlings by a window with a southern exposure is best. Remember that seedlings get leggy when their main stem grows tall and thin. It is caused by insufficient sunlight and a sheltered environment. If this is occurring, try to increase light and also place a fan near the plants to provide some artificial wind. A slight breeze helps plants slow down their legginess.

Of course, planting seeds also extends the season somewhat and we are always excited to get things moving in March. We hope every gardener will try at least one packet of seeds this year.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

Preserving open space has long been of paramount concern here on the East End. Because the value of land has risen so rapidly, developers are eager to build here in hopes of earning lofty profits. The local government has been forced to become increasingly scrutinizing of approvals in recent years, and to pay close attention to sensitive environmental concerns that threaten the area. Organizations such as the Peconic Land Trust, have been aiding East End communities in this crusade since 1983. Since that time they have preserved 8,300 acres in the Riverhead sector alone. In 2006, The Peconic Land Trust successfully conserved another 206 acres of farmland and open space within the Riverhead Township, from Calverton to Jamesport, in conjunction with landowners, communities, and local governments. Ten of the most well-known farm families on the North Fork were among those who participated in numerous programs, such as the Community Preservation Program, and contributed to grants from the New York State agricultural markets, enabling them to protect many acres of precious farmland that had been family-owned for generations. One of the properties included in a recent purchase to protect family farms is a 27-acre farm on Sound Avenue in Jamesport known as Harbes Farm. Another 26 acres in Calverton, owned by Herbert Hulse, and an additional 60-acre sod farm owned by the Edwards family (soon to be purchased by Delea), were also included in the acquisition. Seven other farm families participated in the purchase in order to save their land from eventual development, leaving the East End a little greener for posterity.

Harbes Farm

The East End must struggle with delicately balancing progress and preservation more and more each year as the pressure of development pushes further East. Groups like the Peconic Land Trust work toward fostering relationships between governments, business owners and perspective buyers so that they understand the big picture when it comes to purchasing or developing large parcels of land.

Visitors must keep in mind that preserving the natural beauty on the East End is a necessity in order to keep tourism, the area's primary source of revenue, thriving. Tourists come East to see the fields, vines, undisturbed shorelines and quaint villages, not strip malls and housing developments. This month, the Peconic Land Trust held an outreach seminar to help educate landowners and farmers about conservation programs and tax incentives available to them. As a result, 20 more families have applied to sell the development rights to their properties to land conservation groups and local governments in order to save them. The Farmland Preservation and Open Space Programs have saved more that 1,445 acres of Long Island farmland since 1997. Even large, strictly commercial sites have been subject to preserving large portions of their land in order to ensure that they do not disturb the environment too gravely. The importance of concessions such as these was exemplified when endangered Tiger Salamanders were found living on the site where the Tanger Outlet stores were built in Riverhead.

New housing developments have been popping up all over the North Fork in the past few years, and the number of developers coming into the area is still growing. Hamlets such as Baiting Hollow, once strictly farm communities, are now comprised of mostly residential homes or condominiums. Further out on the North Fork, towns like Greenport, East Marion and Orient have also experienced population growth in recent years.

As many as three vineyards are currently on the market – and there are hundreds of acres of farmland available for sale. Two North Shore vineyards have already changed hands and new vineyards are sprouting up all the time. Duck Walk Vineyard, previously limited to one vineyard on Montauk Highway in Bridgehampton, has recently expanded their holdings to include part of the North Fork. They now own massive acreage spanning both Forks. They have built a new tasting room among their many acres of grapes on Southold. The new facility is slated to open for business this spring. Landmark properties, such as the old Victorian Inn and The Shady Lady in Greenport have recently gone on the market, along with a motel and marina in the Port of Egypt harbor area of Southold that includes a retail space and a working fish market.

As we watch these parcels change hands, we are fortunate that groups such as the Peconic Land Trust are here to protect and preserve these precious East End commodities.

Dear Dan,

I guess that by now others informed you that the picture is not Ava, but Lana.

A BAD SIGN

Dear Dan,

After leaving a "For Sale" sign at a residence in Montauk for a year or so after the 'exclusive' expired (stuck to rot by the side of the house), and ignoring all requests by the owner to pick it up (and telling the owner not to worry about it), it would be considered abandoned by a "major" real estate broker.

So why, after having their requests denied for ANOTHER exclusive/listing (because of over reaching language in the listing agreement), did this brokerage company call the police to complain that the rusty rotten abandoned sign was painted by the owner and used for a "For Sale" sign, a year or so after the 'exclusive' expired (when they obviously had the owner's phone number)?

Would it have been better for the owner to just bring it to the recycling center himself, somehow? Sour grapes? I heard the real estate market is a bit slow, but are the real estate companies now forcing people to buy their abandoned signs at $75 per sign?

Thanks.
An abandoned owner

CLEARING UP THE COMICS

Dear Dan,

In response to Oliver Peterson's inquiry (When In Manhattan (3/16/07) as to which courthouse steps were the scene of Captain America's death in Marvel Comics #25. Desertnews.com, reported that it was New York City's Federal Courthouse. I have no reason to doubt their accuracy in reporting and so I will, until proven otherwise, take that to be the truth.

And you thought, Ollie, that no one was paying attention.......enthusiastically responding via snail mail, your undying fan and big brother.

EAR PLUG ON THE EAST END?

Dear Dan,

Well, doodle, doodle, do! What about the horse whinnying police?

The traffic noise while I'm taking a Sunday afternoon nap police? How about the nose hair police? The ever so annoying baby crying in the supermarket police? Post nasal drip uncontrollable coughing in church police? Cell phone talking loud enough that I can hear your conversation police? The I don't know how to give back change sales clerk police? How about using the sidewalk etiquette police? Fashion police? Cellulite police? The ugly garden police? The kids screaming and jumping in the pool police? Department store overstuffed racks police? Too many SUVs police? Too many beds and baths in a single dwelling home police? The noisy speed boat police? Noisy brats on the beach police? Clicking jaw while you chew your food in a public restaurant police? The sneeze police? Perfume police? Oh, what about the chronic complainers police?

Chop, chop, Town of East Hampton Board. You've got a lot of work to do.

Fondly.

A SAD TALE

Dear Dan,

Re: Vincenzo Riccardi– March 2, 2007 Obituary

When I first heard about the story, I wasn't surprised as the world was.

In about 1975, Newsday's Sunday Magazine front cover story was about a man who died in his chair in front of the television. He was dead one, possibly, three years! The man lived in Elmhurst or Elmont, Queens. The house was located very close to the others; the grass wasn't cut, newspapers strewn across the yard etc. Yet no one noticed or cared.

I was in Sag Harbor in the late 1980s when I met a man from New York City. He said: "a person could come out here and die, no one would know!" How correct he was.

Thank you.

Robert Corwin

Hi Robert, glad to hear you're still around. –DR

SUPPORT OUR FRIENDS

Dear Dan,

Thank you for your purchase of tickets for the eighth annual Valentine Salon luncheon benefiting East End Hospice's Camp Good Grief.

Cam Good Grief is a ground – breaking children's bereavement day camp provided by East End Hospice for children who have experienced the profound loss of a loved one. For one week each summer, at St. Gabriel's Retreat on Shelter Island, children participate in arts and crafts, group therapy, water sports and structured play under the guidance of trained therapists, staff and volunteers.

Your support of the Valentine Salon helps to make Camp Good Grief possible and is deeply appreciated by everyone here at East End Hospice, especially the children who attend Camp Good Grief.

Sincerely,

Pricilla A. Ruffin

A LITTLE QUIRKY

Dear Dan,

Well – Dan did it again when he wrote that Ira Rennert built a house for "he and his family." Strange, no one would say "for his family and he."

This is probably the most common English error, other than "hopefully, the weather will improve," as if the weather was able to hope for something.

Not important at all, but we do want our beloved Dan to be perfect, don't we?

Sincerely.

Howard Purcell

Police Blotter

Drug Ring

Agents from the State Drug Enforcement Agency and the Attorney General's office arrested a doctor from Amagansett after he was found to have prescribed an unusually large amount of narcotics – nearly 30,000 pills a day – to his patients. He was also prescribing 60,000 pills of Viagra a day, which was described as "normal for the Hamptons" by authorities.

Fake Bill

A fake $50 bill turned up in Southampton last week. A sharp-eyed bank employee detected the bill after noticing that it didn't look right. The Secret Service was called, as they usually handle these types of crimes. The bank employee was tipped off when he noticed Bugs Bunny on the face of the bill.

Candle Fire

A woman lit a candle on top of her stove in East Hampton and then forgot that she had lit it. The candle caused a fire, which the woman managed to put out before the fire department arrived. Exactly why anyone would light a candle above a stove is still a mystery.

Another Fire

A woman in East Hampton called police after smoke started pouring out of her fireplace and into her house. The fire department showed up and inspected her fireplace and then determined that the woman had a broken chimney elbow. Soon after, the woman remembered that her fireplace had told her that it had hit its funny bone pretty hard that week.

Bad Driver

An erratic driver was driving along Route 27 in East Hampton last week. Police caught up with the driver, who explained that he was just sightseeing and that he was driving poorly because he was not familiar with the area. Police advised him to sightsee the road, unless he wanted to sightsee an East Hampton driving ticket.

Intoxicated Man

A man, who he appeared to be highly intoxicated, was approached by Sag Harbor police. The police found a bottle of Vodka hidden underneath a paper bag, and took the Vodka and the man's keys. He then went from highly intoxicated to highly hung over.

Naked Driver

A man in Hampton Bays was pulled over by police after they noticed that he wasn't wearing a seatbelt. When the officers approached him, they noticed that he wasn't wearing any clothes, either. The man tried to explain to police that he was operating the vehicle while naked on a dare and that he forgot to put on his seatbelt. Police asked the man to cover himself, drive home and put on some clothes. They also told him to be careful not to get anything caught when he put on his seatbelt.

Shelter Island

A man on Shelter Island called police after he heard gunfire outside of his home. Police investigated the incident and found that the gunshot came from hunters, who had all of their licenses in order. The hunters agreed to try to keep it down.

RE/MAX Associate Growth

Nobody sells more real estate than RE/MAX.

RE/MAX offers more advanced training and coaching opportunities than any of our competitors.

RE/MAX is the only real estate organization with it's own television network, delivering industry news, views, education and motivation free to every RE/MAX office in the U.S., every business day.

Collectively, RE/MAX agents spend more than $1 billion a year promoting themselves, each other and the brand, resulting in more market share and sales for everyone in the system.

RE/MAX national advertising is the most recalled in all of real estate.

RE/MAX dominates in national television advertising, with a larger Share of Voice than all other national names combined.

RE/MAX advertising drives consumers to remax.com, where they can view all the listings, no matter the selling agent, in thousands of cities and towns.

remax.com drives leads to RE/MAX agents, with no third-party referral fees.

More consumers visit remax.com than any other competitors' Web sites.

More consumers looking for real estate services go to remax.com than Google or Yahoo.

RE/MAX offers more support and services than any other real estate organization. And RE/MAX agents keep more of every commission they earn. So the longer you wait to say yes to RE/MAX, the more money you're losing every single day.

An excellent investment – a rare opportunity to own an exclusive privately owned estate of this magnitude in the Adirondacks located in Upstate New York.

This spectacular 6,000 sq. ft. custom-built executive residence incorporates the grandeur of American and European styling. It is nestled on 213 acres with open meadows filled with wild flowers and trails leading through lush secluded wooded forests and a small spring-fed pond.

The main house has 6 bedrooms, 6 baths, multiple common sitting areas, an entertainment room, office and reading room. The master bedroom includes a private living room with a large wood burning fireplace and a balcony overlooking the splendor of the property with views of Lake Champlain, Vermont and the High Peaks.

Elegance exists throughout the home with vaulted ceilings, 3 hand carved fireplaces and an 8-stall barn.

There is also a caretaker's/maid's apartment on the top floor with a separate entrance and balcony.

This luxury home is sold beautifully furnished, including linens and china.

Recreation is at your doorstep – with cross country skiing and hiking on the property, boating and fishing five miles away, or enjoy winter sports at one of the nation's premiere winter playgrounds – Lake Placid and Whiteface Mountain only 30 miles away – truly a paradise for all seasons.
